Gentlemen:

Reference is made to your catalogue entitled, "Shall They Rise Again," from which it appears that you are in possession of certain phonographic recordings of radio programs emanating from short-wave radio stations operated by the German Government throughout the war.

This Department is particularly desirous of obtaining phonographic transcriptions of the following programs beamed from Berlin to the USA, which programs were conducted by a woman calling herself "Midge," viz.:

Date	Time of Broadcast	Nature of Broadcast
Jan. 23, 1944	21:30 E.W.T.	Introduction followed by spoken messages from American prisoners of war.
Jan. 25, 1944	19:15 " " "	"
Jan. 27, 1944	23:30 " " "	"
Jan. 30, 1944	21:30 " " "	"
Feb. 1, 1944	19:15 " " "	"

These programs were phonographically recorded by the FCC but, due to jamming of the frequencies to which the FCC Listening Post was tuned at the time, the recorded dialogue is unintelligible.

In the event that your Company was recording during the times mentioned above it is considered possible that you were tuned to frequencies which were not affected by the jamming experienced at FCC and it will be appreciated if you will inform this Department whether or not you possess intelligible phonographic recordings of any or all of the programs noted.

Respectfully,

For the Attorney General,

T. VINCENT QUINN,

Mildred Elizabeth Gillars
Treason

As you know, it is contemplated that within the near future, Mildred Elizabeth Gillars, now in Army custody in Germany, will be brought to the United States for purposes of presenting her case to a grand jury. It is desired to bring these proceedings in the District of Columbia and it, therefore, becomes material to determine which airfields in the Washington area are within the territorial bounds of the District of Columbia.

I am informed that probably Bolling Field is the only airport that may lie entirely within the District of Columbia. I would appreciate it therefore if you would verify this fact and also obtain information indicating whether any portion of Bolling Field may lie without the District of Columbia, so that care may be taken to prevent any jurisdictional questions arising in regard to the point of entry of this defendant into the United States.

Payment of additional fees to GI Veteran witnesses in United States v. Mildred E. Gillars (Axis Sally treason case). — 146-7-51-1708

Reference is made to the attached memorandum from Mr. John M. Kelly who is presently engaged in presenting to the District of Columbia grand jury the evidence in the above-named treason case. You will recall that subject is charged with treason in that she while a native American citizen, during the war assisted the Nazi Government, through radio broadcasts from Germany to American soldiers, and by other means, attempted to affect the morale of our armed forces. It is perhaps needless to add that this is one of the most important cases concerning the war effort and one in which the Attorney General is much interested in successfully prosecuting. Mr. Kelly is faced with a serious problem in the recalcitrant attitude of a number of the witnesses who are former GI's and who are absolutely essential to the successful prosecution of the charge of treason against Miss Gillars.

It appears that most of these former soldiers are now employed in private industry, on a per diem basis, earning daily pay far in excess of the modest allowance made by the law for witness fees. The problem is not altogether new but in this setting has assumed much more importance than heretofore apparent. These men have responded to the first subpoena for appearance before the grand jury, but at the same time have exhibited an ugly mood, stating in no uncertain terms that the financial hardship imposed upon them in view of the small witness fee available is such that they will not reappear at a later date for trial purposes unless more adequate compensation is offered to them. The usual argument based on the citizen's duty under the law is ineffective. These men respond that they have sacrificed much more than others, because of their suffering and hardship while imprisoned in German prisoner of war camps. They are completely aware of their unique position, both as an indispensable government witness and of the public's attitude toward them as heroes or individuals who stand in a preferred status by virtue of their war record and imprisonment by the Germans. As a result they can neither be persuaded to make further sacrifices nor threatened by the possible consequences of refusing to obey future court subpoenas.

Information has come to the Division that some, if not most, of these men have conferred with local newspaper men explaining their plight and threatened to refuse to answer future summons, even if it means contempt of court, which of course will make good news stories for the local papers. Similarly, it appears that some of them have gone to one or more members of Congress, who have by telephone interceded in behalf of the veterans, requesting that special consideration be given these men.

Chron

The Division is aware that Title 28, U.S.C., 600c, provides the usual total $5.00 day witness fee, and that it has been the practice of the Depar t to apply that fee in all instances excep of course, where exper witnesses are called upon to testify. However, in view of the special circumstances involved in the problem that Mr. Kelley is now faced with, and particularly the fact that these GI witnesses are in a sense unique because of their war service and imprisonment by a foreign country, we believe that special consideration should be given to their request for addition compensation in excess of the usual $5.00 a day amount. The alternative to allowing this extra compensation is running the risk of losing the case against Miss Gillars because of the recalcitrant attitude of the government's most important witnesses which would be clearly evident if the government is forced to arres these witnesses under a bench warrant and forcibly detain them. Such a failure to convict could only then be explained by the hard facts that these GI witnesses felt they were being further imposed upon by an ungrateful government which required additional sacrific to that which they had already given during their war time services. Or stated more simply, if insistence is made upon compliance wit the usual $5.00 fee in all these cases, it must be because the Department is more willing to lose the Axis Sally case than it is t approve additional compensation to these witnesses in this instance

For the above reasons, the Criminal Division recommends that the request of Mr. Kelley that these men be paid additional compensation be approved. Whether this extra compensation comes ou of the special allotment of $50,000 in appropriation "Fees of Witnes (Public Law 597, 80th Congress, page 15 of the slip law) and which may be used for expenses of witnesses or informants "as may be authorized or approved by the Attorney General or his Administrativ Assistant", and which was used to pay additional fees for foreign witnesses in the treason trials last year, or whether the extra compensation comes from money appropriated in 5 U.S.C. 55a and auth in the Miscellaneous Salary and Expenses, Field, of the same appropriation act is a matter which the Administrative Division may decide. It is the opinion of the Criminal Division that these witn might be paid from either of these two sources. In addition, it is the opinion of the Criminal Division that in view of the unique position of these former prisoners of war and the experience gained during their internment a plausible argument might be made to classi them as expert witnesses and thus pay them the fee provided for such testimony or, "to assist in the preparation of the case."

I am advised that Mr. Peyton Ford, in view of the importa of the case and the need for a cooperative attitude on the par these 68 witnesses, indicated approval of the idea that these witnesses should be paid fees which are more nearly representative of their actual expenses involved in attending the District Court of the District of Columbia. I am further advised that his approval of their request has been conveyed to the local United States Attorney who has assured these men that such compensation would be forthcoming, and it is with that understanding that they have agreed to return when summoned again for the trial of the case.

Dear Mr. Story:

Re: United States v. Mildred E. Sisk, also known as Mildred Elizabeth Gillars.

The trial date in the Gillars case has once more been adjourned to January 24, 1949. The primary reason for the adjournment was the difficulty in finding hotel accommodations for our witnesses throughout the week of the inauguration. I do not believe that any further adjournment will be asked for or granted.

I suggest that you plan to arrive in Washington on or about Wednesday, January 19. I assume that you have arranged matters in your present office to permit your coming on for the trial and that your present assignments will not interfere with your doing so, notwithstanding the new date of trial. I would appreciate your dropping me a line and letting me know your situation in this respect. I will of course arrange through Mr. McCauley for travel authority, etc., as suggested in your earlier letter.

There is enclosed herewith a copy of the lists of jurors selected to serve during the current term. A similar list will be served upon Miss Gillars some time on Friday, January 7, 1949.

In accordance with our discussion at the Court House, last Wednesday, I presume that arrangements should be made whereby we can meet with Judge Curran, on a date and time suitable to himself and to you, for the purpose of submitting for general consideration questions to be put to the panel during the voir dire examination. If you will be kind enough to determine a date that will be suitable to the Judge and to yourself and notify me of the same, I am sure that nothing will interfere with my being on hand anytime throughout next week.

Dear Mr. Kelley:

In connection with the trial date for Miss Gillars it has just occurred to me that Section 562, Title 18, provides that not only the list of witnesses, but a list of jurors must be supplied the defendant three days before the trial. There is no question as to the list of witnesses. As I understand it, you intend to furnish this list within the next 10 or 15 days.

However, the jurors will not be selected until Tuesday, January 4. Therefore it will be impossible to make the service within the time contemplated by the statute. While this requirement may, under certain circumstances, be waived, I do not believe there should be any waiver in this case. I tried to reach you on the phone today to suggest that you go with me to Judge Curran. I did talk with Judge Curran and he suggested a trial date of January 10 if this is agreeable to you.

Please let me have your wishes in the matter.

Mr. Broome from Tim for you.

COM. v. CLARK, 123 Pa. Super. 277, 187 Atl. 237 (1936).

The accused was charged with bribery and attempted extortion. A conversation with the Attorney General was material. In his office had been installed a form of phonograph (called speak-a-phone by the makers), the microphone being in his room, and the amplifier and recorder equipped with earphones being in an adjoining room. The listeners in that room were not acquainted with accused's voice. The proof was made by operating the recording discs at the trial so as to preproduce the words of the conversation and by the Attorney General testifying to each speaker's voice as the reproduction proceeded: Meanwhile the jury were furnished with previously prepared typed transcripts of the conversation as recorded, so as to follow the oral reproduction and the Attorney General's testimony.

PERTINENT

IF A PHONOGRAPHIC RECORDING CONTAINS SPEECH NOT READILY INT. ~~OR CONVERSATIONS ADMISSIBLE IN EVIDENCE~~, AN ACCURATE WRITTEN TRANSCRIPT OF SUCH LANGUAGE ~~USED~~ MAY BE ADMITTED IN EVIDENCE ~~OR FURNISHED TO THE JURY~~ AS AN AID TO IDENTIFYING THE VARIOUS VOICES RECORDED, ~~and~~ TO ASSIST AN UNDERSTANDING OF THE WORDS SPOKEN, OR AS A SUBSTITUTE EVID. IN LIEU OF ~~FULL~~ PLAYING THE RECORDINGS.

In the subject case there are in the government's possession ~~some~~ 22 ~~fifteen~~ phonographic recordings of German Short-wave ~~government propaganda~~ radio programs in each of which the defendant was an oral participant [illegible] t. These recordings are made up ~~contain impressions~~ of music, ~~renditions~~, program announcements, ~~the~~ speech by divers persons other than the defendant as well as extensive comments by the defendant ~~her~~ and conversations between her and other persons. The Seven ~~Each recording is of full program length and requires a playing time of approximately thirty minutes.~~ recording are of separate program vary in length from 15 minutes to half an hour [illegible] Are Programs, Consisting of Seven plastic recordings was recorded in Germany [illegible], while the others consist of recordings made in the United States of ~~the~~ programs ~~as~~ received by short-wave radio in this country.

In a treason case involving parallel ~~[illegible]~~ facts, Chandler v. United States, ~~[illegible]~~ (Case No. 4296, decided December 3, 1948 by the First Circuit Court of Appeals) the admissibility of similar recordings to prove the traitorous intent of the defendant was approved, the Court saying:

> On the issue of intent, the prosecution was entitled to have the jury consider all the evidence admissible under the ordinary sanctions of verity having a rational bearing on what was in Chandler's mind--which necessarily is a matter of inference. This includes what he did, and also what he said. The evidence was clearly admissible for the purpose stated. Haupt v. United States, ~~*~~ [330 U.S. ~~[illegible]~~ 631, 642.] We cannot say that the district court committed an abuse of discretion in admitting the evidence.

Consonant with ~~[illegible]~~ the requirement of protecting "the ordinary sanctions of verity" mentioned in the Chandler case, there have ~~xxx~~ been prepared in the subject case by a qualified expert ~~xx~~ accurate written transcripts of the language contained in the ~~se~~ phonographic recordings with an appropriate designation of each speaker, and, for the following reasons, it is believed such transcripts are admissible in evidence to aid the jury while listening to the recordings in identifying each speak~~xx~~ in more readily understanding the words spoken, and as substantive evidence of the contents of some of ~~for their consideration in lieu of playing all~~ the recordings.

Voice Identification

In all of the recordings there are extensive remarks and conversations by or among thirty or forty different individuals , including the defendant. If it should be required to stop the audition of each recording and place a qualified witness on the stand to identify the voice of each different speak the processes of trial would be unduly delayed and the continuity of the evidence completely disrupted. Such a procedure would necessitate repeated stoppages of the audition and liftings of the phonographic pick-up head. The grooves on the recordings are so fine and close together that it is practically impossible to replace the needle at the precise point where it is lifted, and a slight variation in distance might alone necessitate a repetition of many minutes playing time of the program already heard.

The use of an accurate written transcript of conversations phonographically recorded to aid voice identification and speed trial processes has received judicial approval.

In Commonwealth v. Clark, 133 Pa. Super. 277, 187 A. 237 (Superior Court of Penna.) defendant was convicted of attempted bribery and extortion. On the trial it was proved that defendant Clark, an executive in a local insurance agency as well as a member of the state senate, had some to the office of the Attorney General of the state and proposed to the Attorney General and the Governor's secretary that certain insurance contracts be awarded his company in return for which he would support certain legislation in which the state administration was interested. The Attorney General anticipating the corrupt proposal had a "speak-o-phone" installed in his office so that any conversations uttered therein would be transmitted by wire to another room and there recorded on metal discs. The conversation was recorded on discs which constituted a primary basis for the conviction.

At the trial difficulty was experienced in differentiating between the voices of the Attorney General, the governor's secretary and the defendant as recorded on the speak-o-phone discs. Therefore, in the interest of saving time and without objection on the part of defendant, written transcripts of the conversation which correctly transcribed the conversations on the discs and which identified each speaker The members of the jury read this transcript while listening to the recordings in order to be able to distinguish the voices of the speakers. The sole purpose of using the transcripts was to facilitate voice identification

Although the defendant made no objection at the trial to the use of the transcript, he did raise the question on appeal, concerning which the Superior Court said:

~~The identical problem encountered in the foregoing case will be met~~ in the case at bar. The recordings involved reflect numerous interviews and conversations between defendant and various persons. It would be most impractical to attempt to stop the recordings and establish by competent witnesses the identity of the speakers' voices. An accurate written transcript of the recorded words, with appropriate designation of each speaker, would enable the jury immediately to determine the identity of each speaker and facilitate an understanding of the words spoken by him.

It is evident from the court's opinion in the Clark case that, ~~xxxxxxxx~~ in order to circumvent the effect of his consent to the use of the transcript the trial, the defendant claimed on appeal that such use violated certain fun mental constitutional rights which could not be waived. The rights asserted not identified, and the appellate court summarily disposed of the objection b concluding that no rights were involved ~~which could not have been waived~~. It not known whether the rights claimed were based on the federal or the state Constitution, but in any event it is not clear how the use of the transcript could have impinged upon any constitutional right. Conceding the materiality contents of the of the recording and the accuracy of the transcript, it would seem that the Court could properly authorize its use, or any other method of communicating the evidence to the jury which would not detract from its verity and still promote orderly trial processes.

Substitute for Audition of Recording

There are some fifteen recordings involved, some of which may be cumulative in nature. While the evidence is considered pertinent and necessary to be introduced for the jury's consideration, it is believed the time of trial could be expedited without detracting from any of defendant's rights by communicating the contents of these recordings to the jury through the admission of accurate transcripts of the records rather than an audition of the recordings.

The admissibility of a transcript of a pertinent recording, in lieu of playing the record, has been approved by our courts.

IF A PHONOGRAPH RECORDING OF A RADIO BROADCAST OF MUSIC AND SPEECH IS ADMISSIBLE IN EVIDENCE, AN ACCURATE WRITTEN TRANSCRIPT OF PERTINENT LANGUAGE SO RECORDED IS ADMISSIBLE AND MAY BE CONSIDERED BY THE JURY IN LIEU OF PLAYING THE RECORDING OR MAY BE READ BY THE JURY CONTEMPORANEOUSLY WITH THE PLAYING OF THE RECORD (1) TO FACILITATE AN UNDERSTANDING OF THE SPEECH RECORDED, (2) TO AID IN VOICE IDENTIFICATION OF THE DIFFERENT SPEAKERS, (3) TO EXPEDITE THE TRIAL, AS WELL AS TO PROVIDE IN WRITING A READY REFERENCE OF THE RECORDED SPEECH FOR USE BY COUNSEL DURING EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES AND FINAL ARGUMENT AND AS AN EXHIBIT WHICH MIGHT BE TAKEN INTO THE JURY ROOM FOR CONSIDERATION BY THE JURY DURING DELIBERATIONS.

In Kilpatrick v. Kilpatrick, 123 Conn. 213, 193 A. 765 (Supreme Court of Errors) defendant in a divorce prosecution was permitted to introduce in evidence transcript of recordings of prior conversations between him and one of plaintiff's witnesses which tended to discredit the witness' credibility. The recordings were made by means of a "speak-o-phone" installed in defendant's library which was wired to a machine in an adjoining room and which recorded on metal discs the words spoken by the parties in the library. A technician listened in with ear-phones during the conversation and simultaneously heard and made notes of the conversation as it was reproduced on the metal discs. A stenographer, Fishkind, transcribed the audible portions of the conversation recorded, all of which could not be understood, and his transcript, supplemented by the notes of the technician, provided a complete written record of the conversation.

The case was tried before the court without a jury. In sustaining the trial court's action in overruling plaintiff's objection to the admission in evidence of the transcript of the recordings made by the stenographer, Fishkind, the appellate court said:

Quote a to b on p. 68

stenographer's

The analogy drawn in the foregoing opinion between the transcript of the recording and an expert's abstract of voluminous documents seems to be sound. The admissibility of such abstracts, of course, is generally accepted.

In Burton v. Driggs, 27 U.S. 125, 136, the Court said:

F C

> When it is necessary to prove the results of voluminous facts or of the examination of many books and papers, and the examination cannot be conveniently made in court, the results may be proved by the person who made the examination.

The general rule with respect to the admissibility of such summary testimony is stated as follows in Wigmore on Evidence, vol. IV, Sec. 1230:

> Where a fact could be ascertained only by the inspection of a large number of documents made up of very numerous detailed statements ~~xxxxxxxxxxxxxx~~  it is obvious that it would often be practically out of the question to apply the present principle by requiring the production of the entire mass of documents and entries to be perused by the jury or read aloud to them. The convenience of trials demands that other evidence be allowed to be offered, in the shape of ~~xxxxxxxxx~~ the testimony of a competent witness who has perused the entire mass and will state summarily the net result. Such a practice is well established to be proper.

The courts unanimously approve such a general rule, including the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, in McNeil v. United States, 85 F.2 698, 703 (D.C.Appeals, 1936.)

~~In the case at bar there are some fifteen~~ each of the recordings ~~to be offered in evidence, each xxxxxxxx containing~~ contains musical renditions, broadcast announcements, conversations, comments by the defendant, etc., ~~and each requiring a playing time of some thirty minutes. While the language on the recordings is intelligible, it may be necessary to play some of the records numerous times in order for all the members of the jury to comprehend the material spoken words. Such a procedure would be impractical and would unduly delay the trial.~~ An accurate transcript of the spoken words made by a competent ~~xxxxxx~~ stenographer, identifying the various speakers, ~~xxx~~ would greatly facilitate an understanding of the recordings and could ~~xx~~ eliminate the necessity of playing all the records. Such a transcript, gleaning from the voluminous recorded material all pertinent speech, ~~xx~~ in principle would seem to be the same as an account or abstract of pertinent items from voluminous documents.

In the Kilpatrick case the court further draws the analogy between the use of a transcript of a recording and an interpreter's testimony as to the meaning of words spoken in a foreign tongue. This appears to be an apt ~~xxxxxx~~ comparison. The use of an interpreter, both as to oral testimony and written documents in a foreign language, is so common to all courts in the United States that no citation of authority on the subject is considered necessary. In the case at bar the transcripts of the recordings are nothing more in principle than an interpreter's explanation of the words spoken, presented in written rather than oral form for the greater convenience of the Court and jury. The interpretation is more accurate, however, since it records the identical words spoken and not a paraphrase of such words in a different language. This is cogent argument for the admissibility of the transcripts since they serve to afford the jury a more accurate understanding of the exact recorded language than could be achieved without their use, while they in no way detracting from the verity of the language and serve at the same time to speed and simplify the processes of trial.

Aid to Hearing

Many of the recordings involved contain loud static noises which prevent one, unaccustomed to listening to recordings of transoceanic broadcasts, from readily understanding the spoken words. This difficulty, eliminated by supplying the listener with an accurate written transcription. The situation presented appears to be perfectly analagous to one involving barely legible handwritten documents. In this latter case evidence of is competent persons uniformly admitted to prove the writing on the questioned document.

This rule is of ancient origin and is expressed in ____ Corpus Juris _____, as follows:

> Where a writing is illegible, parol evidence is as to the matter evidenced thereby is necessarily admissible, and, if the writing is obscure and difficult to read, the evidence of persons skilled in deciphering writing is admissible to show what it is.

The rule has found acceptance in many states by force of statute. California at an early date incorporated into its criminal code the following provision:

> When the characters in which an instrument is written are difficult to be deciphered, or the language of the instrument is not understood by the court, the evidence of persons skilled in deciphering the characters or who understand the language, is admissible to declare the characters or the meaning of the language. (Calif. C.C.P. 1872, Sec. 1863.)

Similar provisions in the criminal codes of other jurisdictions are the following: Canal Zone C.C.P., 1934, Sec. 1881; Phillipine Islands, C.C.P. 1901, Sec. 292; Oregon Code, 1930, Sec. 9-219; Montana Rev. Code, 1921, Sec. 10524.

Continuing the analogy between phonographic recordings and written documents, however, the law seems to be well settled that where a writing is difficult to decifer because of old age, poor penmanship, defective paper, or other reasons, a transcript of their contents prepared by a qualified expert may be introduced.

31 Corpus Jur. Sec. Sec. , states the rule as follows:

> Where a writing is illegible, parol evidence as to the matter evidenced thereby is necessarily admissible, and, if the writing is obscure and difficult to read, the evidence of persons skilled in deciphering writing is admissible to show what it is.

This rule seems to have been consistently followed by the courts of England as well as the United States.

For instance, in Masters v. Masters, 1 P.Wms. 425 (1718,) a suit involving the construction of a handwritten will, the reporter records the following action taken by the court:

> Where the will was writ blindly, and hardly legible, and as to the money-legacies writ in figures, it was ordered to be referred to the Master to examine, and see what those legacies were, and to be assisted by such as were skilled in the art of writing.

In Stone v. Hubbard, 7 Cush. Mass. 597 (1851) the trial court admitted the testimony of handwriting experts on the issue of whether a figure was a "2" or a "4." In holding this ruling proper, the appellate court said:

> The testimony of witnesses, offered as experts in handwriting, was rightly admitted. The rule is well settled, that when the characters in which a paper is written are obscure and difficult to be deciphered, the evidence of persons, whom practice and experience in examining writing have made skillful, is competent for the purpose of aiding the court or jury in arriving at a true reading of the document. Wigam on Wills (3d Ed.) 12, 188, 196; Masters v. Masters, 1 P.Wms. 425; Norman v. Morell, 4 Ves. 769; Sheldon v. Benham, 4 Hill 129; and see Armstrong v. Burrows, 6 Watts. 268.

In State v. Wetherell, 70 Vt. 270, the defendant appealed from a conviction for rape on the ground that the trial court erroneously admitted a handwriting expert to decipher a document sent by him to the prosecutrix. It appeared that this document was a copy of "The Black Cat," a magazine, in which the defendant hand dotted or marked certain words which, read in proper sequence, conveyed a message. The appellate court said:

> If the prisoner marked and dotted those words and letters, the communication was as much a letter from him as though he had written the same thing in his own hand: and it was competent to call anyone to make the decipherment, whether expert or not, as much as it would be to read a letter so illegibly written as to be difficult to make out. If the prisoner claimed that the witness did not decipher correctly, he was at liberty to show it. We do not understand that the witness ~~would~~ did more than to read the communication as he deciphered it.
> It was proper for the magazine to go to the jury, that they might decipher the communication for themselves if necessary, as it was for them to show what was written there.

In State v. Sysinger, 25 S.D. 110 (1910) letters were admitted in evidence written by the defendant to his wife which in effect admitted his guilt of the offense of rape for which he was charged. With respect to his objection to the use of an expert witness to decipher the letters, the appellate court said:

> It is further contended by the defendant that the court erred in overruling the objection of the defendant to the introduction of evidence of an expert to explain to, or interpret for, the jury the letters so alleged to have been written by the defendant to his wife, but we are of the opinion that the court committed no error in permitting the expert to explain them. The letters were so poorly written and unintelligible to the ordinary juror that it would be difficult for him to read them. The expert, whowas a clerk in the post office at Chamberlain, familiar with handwriting, and competent to testify, gave what appears to have been an interpretation of the letters. Mr. Greenleaf in his work on Evidence, (volume 1, Sec. 280) says: "It is also superfluous to add that the rule does not exclude the testimony of experts to aid the court in the reading of a written instrument. If the characters are difficult to be deciphered, or the language, whether technical, or local and provincial, or altogether foreign, is not understood by the court, the evidence of persons skilled in deciphering writing or who understood the language in which the instrument is written, or the technical or local meaning of the terms employed, is admissible to declare what are the characters, or to translate the instrument or to testify to the proper meaning of the particular words."

In Dreyer v. Hard, 127 N.Y. 235, involving the [redacted] interpretation of a cash receipt in which an expert testified as to abbreviated whether a certain written/word was "July" or "January," the appellate court [redacted] said:

> The principle involved is whether it may be shown what the word in a written instrument is. To a person or a juror (if we may suppose the latter case,) who can neither read or write, it is indispensable that someone who can should be allowed to testify what the words are. This course would be necessary in such case, however plainly written or printed the words might be.
> Upon the same principle it is allowable for the jurymen who are perhaps only moderately skilled in letters and words, to determine what the letters and characters are and what word they make. The jurors may do this from the knowledge they already possess and such as they gain during the trial by the reading and the comparison they make with other writings already introduced in evidence. Indeed the court held in the opinion in this case at General Term that the jury might compare the receipt in question with the dates and letters in the note and the other writings to determine the date of the receipt. If such comparison may be made by unskilled [redacted] juryman, why should they not be aided and [redacted] enlightened as they may be in analogous cases by the genuiness of handwriting, alterations and assimilations by men who have made the subject of handwriting a study andhave obtained skill and proficiency in that branch of knowledge. As no objection was made that the witness was incompetent, it must be assumed that hewas qualified as an expert to give his opinion and the grounds of it in aid of the jury. (citing authorities.)
> If we analyze the practical processes which have to be gone through with in order to elicit and apply this kind of evidence, whether from experts or lay witnesses, we shall find that the witness is required to examine and determine what the letters and characters or even hieroglyphics are and what word they form in combination. The word thus formed may be in a native or foreign language and if it is foreign, then another process is yet to be gone through with before it can reach the apprehension of the lay mind and that is, to interpret its meaning into the native language of the juror. The testimony of expert witnesses frequently exemplify one or both of these processes and are of common use in the investigations carried on in courts of justice and in other avocations. It often becomes necessary and pertinent in judicial proceedings to introduce foreign laws and to interpret their meaning to the comprehension of the juror not familiar with the foreign languag

FD 11

In Kux v. Bank, 53 N.W. 828, 93 Mich. 511, the court admitted expert testimony as to whether or not written figures in a bank book were supposed to be "$105" or "$405."

In Sheldon v. Benham, 4 Hill N.Y. 129, the court admitted a bank employee to testify to the meaning of certain abbreviations used in connection with the administrative procedure involved in the collection of bills and notes.

California at an early date incorporated into its criminal code a provision for the receipt of testimony ~~in explain~~ interpretative of not readily understandable documents.

> "When the characters in which an instrument is written are difficult to be deciphered, or the language of the instrument is not understood by the court, the evidence of persons skilled in deciphering the characters or who understand the language, is admissible to declare the characters are the meaning of the language." Calif. C.C.P. 1872, Sec. 1863.

Similar provisions in the criminal codes of other jurisdictions are the following: Canal Zone C.C.P., 1934, Sec. 1881; Phillipine Island, C.C.P. 1901, Sec. 292; Oregon Code, 1930, Sec. 9-219; Montana Rev. Code, 1921, Sec. 10524.

Other cases supporting the general rule are Hardin v. State, 27 Miss. 568, 583; Beach v. O'Riley, 14 W.Va. 58; Rex v. Williams, 8 C.&P. 434; Walrath v. Whittekind, 26 Kans. 482; Arthur v. Roberts, 60 Barb. 580.

The only case indicating a contrary view is Hopkins v. State, 172 N.Y. 360, 65 N.E. 173, in which the court held an expert was not qualified to testify that perpindicular marks drawn through the signature on a person's will were made in the handwriting of the testator since such marks were not handwriting within the meaning of the statute permitting expert testimony on handwriting. Wigmore characterizes this decision as "unsound," although it is clearly distinguishable from the cases cited above and departs from the holdings of other New York decisions involving expert testimony on handwriting.

Best Evidence Rule -

Where it appears that what is called secondary evidence is clearly equal in probative value to what is called the primary proof and that fraud or imposition reasonably is not to be feared, the reason on which the best evidence rule rests ceases, and the rule itself ceases to be applicable. Re: Records stained by Woerheide in Berlin.

In Welter's opinion the name (written in German script) on the paper disc appearing on one of these records is "Stemmer". He remembers a girl in her late 20's or early 30's by the name of Stemmer who worked as a technician for the European and Berlin local stations.

First met Gillars near end of [illegible] '42 — Would often see her in Recording Studios in the Banach, as he was making rounds of inspection or as his business took him there.

He does NOT recall any of the content of the recordings she made on these occasions as he paid no particular attention to what she was saying. His impression is that she was recording alone — and that the substance of her program was [illegible] or conversational in nature (i.e. of [illegible] & political). He recalls that she repeatedly referred to Roosevelt's phrase — "I have told you again and again etc." — and was [illegible] British and [illegible]. Cannot remember [illegible] which [illegible] but does recall the program for KW —

He remembers having been [illegible] (2 or 3 times) to assign a technician to visit POW camps with technical equipment for recording messages. Cannot remember precisely who he assigned but states he may have been Kosel or Kroschel (22 [illegible]). The band used in portable equipment was not the same as that used in station and it was necessary for technician to re-record from the portable band to the conventional band. He remembers [illegible] definitely that certain POW recordings were in fact re-recorded on a conventional Band by OSWALD Scharfenberg — Scharfenberg [illegible] accompanying C. Gillars to POW camps.

MR. KELLEY - Will you please return Mr. Ward's (US Marshal - Dial 1228, Ext: 2854) call around 2 o'clock today; he called you at 12:10.

Mrs. Shepherd, Ext: 733, left following messages:

She said when she talked with you earlier this morning she mentioned that attendants fees for Hansford & Lynskey should come out of appropriation "Miscellaneous Salaries and Expenses." However she checked and they would rather have the money taken out of appropriation "Fees of Witnesses", so you can ask the Marshal at the same time you request he issue TR's for Hansford & Lynskey, also request he issue TR's for their attendants and advise him ~~it wi~~ expenses will be made out to Appropriation, "Fees of Witnesses."

She dictated following sentence to be incorporated in letters to Marshals requesting they advance fees of $10, or more:

(It is understood, of course, that the procedure set out on page 503, Point 23 of the United States Marshals' Manual will be followed with respect to requesting reimbursement from the Marshal in the District of Columbia.)
