REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES ON THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE
FOREIGN AGENTS REGISTRATION ACT OF 1938, AS AMENDED
FOR THE CALENDAR YEAR 1967

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA IN CONGRESS ASSEMBLED:

I have the honor to report on the administration of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, pursuant to Section 11 of that Act, which requires the Attorney General from time to time to report to the Congress concerning the administration of the Act, as well as the nature, source and content of political propaganda disseminated or distributed by agents of foreign principals registered under the Act.

It has been the policy of the Department since 1950 to prepare a report each year. This report covers the administration and enforcement of the Foreign Agents Registration Act for the calendar year 1967.

STATISTICAL SUMMARY

In 1967, sixty-eight new registration statements were filed and 84 registrations were terminated, leaving a total of 468 active registrations on file as of December 31, 1967. There were 421 short form registrations filed by persons engaged directly in activity in furtherance of the foreign principal by various types of associates of the registrants such as partners, directors, officers, employees and agents.

During this same year, 194 amendments were filed to correct deficiencies in registration statements already on file. The staff of the Registration Section reviewed 770 supplemental registration statements and processed 7,817 pieces of correspondence from other government agencies, registrants and the general public.

Appendix I contains an alphabetical list of all persons whose registration statements under the Act were in an active status at any time during 1967. New registrations received during 1967 are marked with an asterisk.

Appendix II lists all registrations according to the geographical area or nationality field of the foreign principal which were in an active status during the calendar year 1967, as well as a brief statement identifying the nature of the agency. Registrations terminated during the year are marked with the symbol (T).

Appendix III contains an alphabetical listing of all short form registrations which were in active status during 1967.

ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT

The Department experienced its first full year of administration of the Foreign Agents Registration Act under the amendments enacted in July of 1966. The amended definition of the term "agent of a foreign principal" together with the newly enacted exemption for attorneys resulted not only in the termination of a number of registrations previously on the books, but also made registration unnecessary in connection with some foreign relationships where previously there may have been a prima facie requirement for registration. Under the amended law activities which now create the agency relationship are limited to four categories, the first and fourth of which are similar in nature since both involve political activities. The scope of the term "political activities" as defined in the 1966 amendments was narrowed from the definition of that term as contained in the Rules enacted under the Act before it was amended. In addition, a person to be constituted an agent of a foreign principal must not only engage in the specific activity referred to but must do so as an agent, representative, employee or servant, or by acting "at the order, request, or under the direction or control of a foreign principal." Thus it is now necessary to establish some element of common law agency before a person may be constituted an agent of a foreign principal and no longer can a person occupy such a status solely by reason of a course of activity, as was possible under the Act prior to its amendment.

The net result of the 1966 amendments was, to a large extent, to remove the applicability of the Foreign Agents Registration Act from the so-called subversive area and place primary emphasis on the protection of the integrity of the decision making process of our Government as well as on the right of the public to the identification of the sources of foreign political propaganda.

Compliance with the Act is ordinarily obtained through normal administrative procedures.

A careful review of the statements filed generated many requests from the Department for further disclosure or other corrective action from registrants, and as indicated previously, this resulted in the filing of 194 amended statements. No prosecutive action for wilful violations of the Act was required to be undertaken during the year.

The Department continued the practice of disseminating copies of registration statements and supplements to interested departments and agencies of the Federal Government as well as to certain Congressional committees.

NATURE, SOURCE AND CONTENT OF POLITICAL PROPAGANDA

The following is an analysis of the principal trends noted during 1967 in the propaganda material disseminated within the United States in the English language on behalf of foreign principals and geographical areas listed below. Principal publications are set forth together with the approximate circulation figures per issue.

During the year 1967, 3,577 dissemination reports were filed in connection with the distribution of 12,422 different pieces of propaganda which were submitted with the reports.

Arab States

I. The League of Arab States, which is composed of Algeria, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, United Arab Republic, and Yemen, maintains the Arab Information Center (AIC), 757 Third Avenue, New York City, with branches located in Washington, D.C., Chicago, San Francisco, and Dallas. The two principal publications of the AIC, in addition to press releases and pamphlets, are Arab News and Views, a bi-monthly sheet (13,000), and Arab World, a monthly magazine (18,200).

Reports on the events surrounding Arab-Israeli fighting in early June were predominant in AIC publications during 1967. According to these statements, the most basic cause of the continuing unrest in the Middle East has been Israel's failure to repatriate or compensate the Palestinian refugees of 1948. In addition, the Arabs charge that since Israel's inception, she has subjected her neighbors to continuous attacks and provocations which have reportedly incurred United Nations (UN) censure on twenty-nine occasions.

The two major Arab moves preceding the outbreak of fighting in June, i.e., Egypt's request for the withdrawal of the UN Emergency Force from the Gaza Strip and Sinai Peninsula and her closing of the Gulf of Aqaba to Israeli shipping, were, according to AIC publications, defensive measures. With regard to the withdrawal of the UN force, Arab spokesmen cited alleged Israeli threats against Syria and build-up of forces on the armistice line, and declared that the UAR's action was taken in order to enable it to go to the aid of Syria in case of attack by Israel, and to provide protection for the UN forces and ensure their safety and security. League spokesmen further emphasized that the UN forces were stationed in the area with the consent of the UAR and that Israel has never allowed UN forces to operate on the Israeli side of the border. According to these reports also, U. Thant was assured by President Nassar at the time of the withdrawal that the UAR would not initiate action against Israel. The Arab States claim that this promise was kept and that they were the victims of a "Pearl Harbor-like sneak attack" by Israel.

With regard to Aqaba, an article in the monthly publication Arab World declared that the UAR, by asserting its legal sovereignty over the territorial waters of the Gulf, "only restored the status quo as it existed prior to the invasion of Egypt by Israel in 1956." The Arab action, according to this and other reports, was intended "to prove to the Israelis that aggression does not pay" and was also aimed at preventing Israel from bringing in oil and other strategic supplies, allegedly to be used in raids against Syria.

The attitude of some of the world powers toward the crisis came under attack by the Iranian Ambassador to the UN, Mr. Pachachi, who was quoted in the June 1, 1967 issue of Arab News and Views as questioning why countries which saw navigation in the gulf of Aqaba as a casus belli did not display the same sense of urgency and concern for the 1½ million Palestinian refugees. Mr. Pachachi stressed that the right of these refugees to repatriation or compensation from Israel had been affirmed in eighteen resolutions of the UN General Assembly, without avail. The Ambassador commented further on this matter in the following words: "Are we not entitled to conclude therefore that . . . the fait accompli is the only principle to guide UN actions? One wonders if that is why Israel, this persistent and avid practitioner of the fait accompli, is permitted to defy with impunity so many resolutions of the UN."

Arab relations with the United States during the fighting were touched upon in an Arab World article which stated that, "The Arabs have no quarrel with the American people. We only resent the one-sided position taken at times by the American Government in support of Israel. All the Arabs are in sympathy with the dominant sentiment of the American people that no one would like to see the United States maneuvered into shedding American blood to effect Zionist political objectives."

Aside from the crisis reports, Arab publications throughout the year contained many detailed articles about individual Arab countries, usually focusing on the manner in which traditional customs are being fused with modern techniques. The fact that such fusion is not often an easy experience was expressed in one Arab World article which read, "The Middle East today is going through the painful evolution already experienced by more developed countries . . . It is fair to recall that this is the price paid by young countries who have only recently achieved independence from foreign countries."

II. The Palestine Arab Delegation, 441 Lexington Avenue, New York City, representing the Lebanon-based Arab Higher Committee for Palestine, disseminated intermittent press releases and letters to United Nations and United States Officials (average circulation of 600).

There are few Palestine Arab Delegation releases that do not contain attacks on the United States, Great Britain, and Israel. An example of the kind of accusation levied may be seen in the following paragraph which was contained in a public letter sent by the Delegation to the UN Security Council in January 1967: "The Palestine Arab Delegation wishes to reiterate its accusation against the three permanent members of the Security Council, the United States, the United Kingdom, and France. These three powers have armed the Zionist international gangsters, have supplied them and still supply them with billions of dollars, and have acted as a protective shield for them in the UN. The responsibility for any aggression committed by the international Zionist gangsters must fall squarely on the three permanent members of the Security Council."

In all such denunciations, the United States comes under particular fire for reportedly allowing its foreign policies to be shaped by "Zionist pressure groups." Thus, the Delegation charges that Congressmen and other elected officials are influenced by the promise of Jewish votes and financial backing to support Israeli policies inimical to the United States' own best interests. Similarly, the Delegation claims that it was "Zionist pressure groups" which "railroaded" the United States into World War I as Britain's ally, in return for which, so it is charged, the British agreed to give world Jews an Arab homeland in Palestine at the end of the war.

During the Arab-Israeli fighting in June, the Delegation charged Israel with committing "massacres and atrocities" against Arab civilian populations, with driving the inhabitants of captured Arab towns out of their homes and into refugee status, and with committing "crimes" since the initial establishment of Israel "comparable to Nazi crimes against the Jews in Europe." They reiterated the accusations of other Arab groupings that the Arab states were the victims of a "Pearl Harbor-like sneak attack," adding that the Israeli gain would not be decisive and that the Arab nation "is preparing for the final battle."

III. The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), 801 Second Avenue, New York City, representing the organization of the same name in Cairo, Egypt, distributed pamphlets, press releases and an infrequent newsletter (7,000).

The publications filed with the Department in 1967 by the Palestine Liberation Organization for the most part repeated the denunciations of Israel made by other Arab organizations. A particular emphasis in this group's writings was the so-called "militarism" of Israel, which was described as a nation "established and maintained by the sword." According to the PLO, Israel, in comparison to its population of less than two and a half million, supports the biggest army in the world, and has "periodically used this army to attack peaceful, defenseless Arab villages." After Israel's conquest of Jerusalem in June, the PLO charged that the Israelis had turned the Holy Land into "one of the largest military barracks in the Middle East."

The Organization, claiming to speak for all of the Arab people of Palestine, renewed its oath in 1967 to return to the homeland and "to liberate it from Zionist usurpation and domination."

IV. Information pertaining to Saudi Arabia was distributed through the public relations firm of Hill & Knowlton, Inc., 150 East 42nd Street, New York City. This firm occasionally issues press releases on the Kingdom and has a news sheet entitled People, Places and Products (1,000) which carries articles on Saudi Arabia.

Receiving the most attention in articles on Saudi Arabia in 1967 was the government's unveiling of a scale model of an experimental desalination plant soon to be constructed in Jeddah as a cooperative project by the United States and Saudi Arabian governments. The Minister of Agriculture and Water of the Kingdom in a personal visit to Washington in May hailed the role played by the United States Department of the Interior in the project as of "such an invaluable nature as to lead to a degree of cooperation that could be a model for all nations to follow." The Agriculture Minister also pointed to his country's $143 million program to find and develop new fresh water sources as "a signal to the world that Saudi Arabia understands and appreciates the challenges and responsibilities of the late 20th century."

Statistics on Saudi Arabian agriculture provided during the year indicated an increase of cultivated land over the past decade of more than 62% and an increase in crop yield of 216%. Reports from government sources also indicated that efforts to improve the living standards of the rural inhabitant are paralleling efforts to increase agricultural output.

Australia

The Australian News & Information Bureau, 636 Fifth Avenue, New York City, distributed the Australian Daily News (576), Australian News Weekly Roundup (1,872), and Australian Monthly Finance and Commerce Notes (125), all of which may be described as "news sheets."

Australian-American relations received considerable attention in the Australian news sheets in June of 1967 with the visit of Prime Minister Harold Holt to this country. In an address to the American-Australian Association in New York, the Prime Minister expressed what he believed to be the importance of his country to the United States in the following words: "I believe it to be an abiding interest of the United States of America, at the highest policy level, to assist where it can to strengthen the economy and the international significance of a staunch ally and friend who can mean so much to America in our area of the world."

On this same general note, the Prime Minister made a plea for greater American understanding of Australia's economic problems. A particular area of concern to Mr. Holt was the American interest equalization tax, which he stated operates unreasonably against Australia in its quest for investment capital. Pointing out that payment of existing debts is actually causing the Australian Government to lose its reserves to the United States, Mr. Holt questioned why his country could not get the same exemptions from the equalization tax allegedly granted to Canada and Japan. The Prime Minister indicated that without further investments to stimulate Australia's economic growth, the country's defense capacity and its capacity to give aid to others will be affected. In this regard, the Prime Minister noted that, in addition to its own defense spending, Australia gives military aid to Vietnam and to Malaysia. He further stressed that although Australia is itself a capital importing country, its assistance for other developing countries has been steadily rising, to the point where Australia is now the world's third largest aid giver in net terms per head of population.

Turning to trade issues, Mr. Holt expressed concern about American restrictive legislation on the major Australian exports of wool, sugar, meat, lead, zinc and dairy products. The Prime Minister cited statistics which indicate that Australia is the fastest growing market for American exports which have almost doubled Australia's exports to this country over the past 17 years. Faced with these statistics, Mr. Holt indicated that further United States restrictions against the import of Australian goods would be severely damaging to the Australian economy.

In publications throughout the year, the Australians give considerable praise to the American effort in Vietnam and expressed support for "strongly limited, controlled and discriminatory military bombing of selected targets in North Vietnam." Australia's own participation in the fighting was said to rest on the belief that "Communist-inspired and directed aggression is a threat to free people and small nations everywhere."

Austria

Curtis J. Hoxter, Inc., 880 Third Avenue, New York City prepared and distributed two regular newsletters on behalf of the Austrian Federal Press Office and the Austrian Business and Financial Community. These sheets were entitled Austria Editorial News Note (250) and Austria--Commerce, Finance, Economy (125).

As reported in the Austrian newsletters, the keynote of Austria's present foreign policy is a continued push for affiliation with the European Common Market. Austrian spokesmen see the future prosperity and growth of their country as vitally tied to the expansion of foreign trade, most particularly with the major West European countries. In reply to strong Soviet objections that a Common Market affiliation would destroy Austrian neutrality, government officials are emphatic in declaring that any European Economic Community (EEC) arrangement would be strictly an economic one that would in no way put Austria under German domination or otherwise jeopardize her political neutrality.

Austrians paid high tribute to the United States in June of 1967 on the 20th anniversary of the Marshall Plan. Chancellor Klaus was reported as calling the Marshall Plan "a unique historic event" which laid the foundation of Europe's present prosperity and which saved Austrians from having to make the inhuman and unnecessary sacrifices with which her Eastern neighbors had to buy their postwar progress. According to the newsletters, Austrians do not limit their gratitude to anniversaries but repeatedly and spontaneously refer to United States assistance as the basis for their own prosperity and viability as a state. According to these reports, anti-Americanism is unknown in the Alpine Republic.

Bahamas

Hill and Knowlton, Inc., 150 East 42nd Street, New York City, in affiliation with its Bahama Office, disseminated occasional press releases on behalf of the Bahamas Ministry of Tourism and Development.

Releases distributed in 1967 centered on speeches made by the newly elected Premier of the Bahamas, Mr. Lynden O. Pindling, during a February visit to this country. The dominant theme of these speeches was a strong bid for increased United States tourism and investment in the Bahamas. With regard to investment, Mr. Pindling assured Americans that freedom from income and corporate taxation would continue in his country, although the new administration plans to revise real estate taxes and licensing fees for businesses. The Prime Minister also reportedly told groups of bankers and businessmen that American spending in the Bahamas pays dividends to the United States in increased trade between the two countries. Citing statistics which indicate that the Bahamas spend almost two dollars in the United States on goods and services for every one tourist dollar received, Mr. Pindling declared that the American investment community by helping the Bahamas would be "not only strengthening the economy of a staunch American ally, but also building a strong market for United States goods abroad." Mr. Pindling also made the claim that the Bahamas liberal tax laws and reputation for political stability are establishing the Islands as a small but growing world financial center and an important banking and trust repository.

In other speeches during his visit, the new Prime Minister outlined a broad program of reform and social improvement for the Islands. Under the heading of major reform, he promised a thorough investigation of casino gambling and the establishment of a permanent statutory body to be charged with gambling regulation and control.

Belgium

The Belgian Government Information Center, 50 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City, distributed occasional press releases and pamphlets.

A key press release in March 1967 summarized Belgium's position on many current foreign policy issues. Included were expressions of support for British membership in the Common Market and support for a strengthened North Atlantic Treaty Alliance, which Belgian officials regard as a major factor for world peace and stability. With regard to Vietnam, the Belgian Foreign Minister, Pierre Harmel, called on both sides to make use of quiet diplomacy to prepare for peace negotiations. The Foreign Minister also stated that as soon as hostilities in Viet Nam come to an end, Belgium will sponsor in the United Nations a program of aid and reconstruction similar to that of the United Nations commission for the recovery of Korea.

Brazil

Information on Brazil was filed by three sources in 1967. Curtis J. Hoxter, Inc., 880 Third Avenue, New York City published a bi-weekly news sheet entitled Brazil-Gram (315) on behalf of the Embassy of Brazil; the Brazilian Government Trade Bureau, 551 Fifth Avenue, New York City, published a monthly Brazilian Bulletin; and Samuel Stavisky & Associates issued press releases on behalf of the Sindicato da Industria de Cafe Soluvel, Brazil.

News from Brazil in 1967 centered on the policies of the new regime of President Costa e Silva who was sworn in as Brazil's 22nd chief executive in March. In his inaugural address, the new president reportedly spoke of the need to fight against poverty and declared that the deepest root of his government would be "social humanism." The domestic program he outlined gave top priority to a continued battle against inflation, in conjunction with programs aiming at elimination of illiteracy, better education and health facilities, improved transportation and housing, and direct help for the nation's poor. Although a military man, the new president noted that he was a civilian president committed to the rebuilding of civilian power in Brazil.

In the realm of foreign policy, President Costa e Silva declared that a main aim of his foreign policy will be to find new world markets for Brazil's products and to obtain, through export sales and technical assistance, additional means to speed the country's growth. Foreign investments were said to be welcomed "whenever they are aimed at fully participating in Brazil's life and thus contributing to its development." As a part of the effort to increase exports, Brazil has reportedly embarked on a major agricultural diversification program, aimed at lessening the nation's dependence on its coffee crop. In addition, Brazilian Bulletin reports indicate that an emphasis on the export of manufactures in order to lessen reliance on raw material sales is also planned.

Also in the realm of foreign policy, President Costa e Silva pledged in April that relations with the United States would continue close, and reaffirmed what he called "our determination to cooperate entirely with the United States of America."

In May of 1967, Brazil joined eighteen other Latin American nations in signing the Treaty of Mexico to ban nuclear weapons in Latin America. At the same time, however, the Brazilians reserved the right to produce nuclear devices for peaceful purposes. Brazil reportedly is determined to develop atomic energy for use in such major projects as excavations of canals, ports, and inland waterways and has rejected the idea that any nation needing nuclear devices for peaceful purposes should be able to obtain them only through the nuclear powers. As reported in Brazil-Gram, Brazil has proposed creation of an international agency exclusively empowered to manufacture nuclear devices so that "no country retains, legally or materially, the capacity to produce them" In the interim, it is the Brazilian position that to exclude Latin America from nuclear research would lead to a drain of scientific talent and slow needed economic progress. Accordingly, Brazil is going forward with its own research, and has signed an agreement with the state of Israel for technical cooperation in the nuclear energy field. The United States' offers to provide Brazil with nuclear explosives for peaceful purposes, rather than assisting her to produce her own, were noted without further comment in Brazil-Gram reports.

Chile

The Embassy of Chile, Washington, D. C., distributed a fortnightly publication entitled News from Chile.

"Revolution in Freedom" was a phrase commonly used in Embassy bulletins to describe Chile's accomplishments since the election of President Eduardo Frei in 1964. Following is a listing of the major achievements of the Frei government which Embassy reports highlighted throughout the year: Greater popular participation in government through a doubling of the number of voters and through the organization of a variety of community groupings to encourage popular participation in decision making; an enormous impulse given to education on all fronts--total enrollment, school construction, teacher training and government scholarships; and incorporation of the rural masses into the mainstream of the country's economy through land redistribution, rural wage increases, and the establishment of rural labor organizations.

Great progress was also reported in the country's economic development program for expansion of foreign trade and expansion of farm and industrial production. With respect to the latter, Embassy bulletins indicated that agreements with the large copper mining companies have been completed to bring about the "Chileanization of the copper industry." It is hoped, according to the reports, that government investment in copper will double present production and triple copper refining in Chile by 1970. Total Chilean increase in gross national product for 1966 was cited as 6.8%, reportedly one of the highest percentage increases in the world, and a similar growth rate was expected for 1967. In addition, 1966 saw a $116 million balance of payments surplus for Chile which was reportedly to be devoted to amortization of the foreign debt, including large payments to the United States. The surplus was also seen as a beginning step in a hoped for reversal of Chile's long dependence on foreign loans.

In the area of foreign policy, Chile continued to voice strong support for Latin American integration and made several efforts to implement such union on the sub-regional level and cited as an example the signing of an agreement, in 1967, with the governments of Peru, Venezuela, Ecuador, and Colombia to form the Andean Development Corporation, which is aimed at an equitable distribution of investments for multinational enterprises within the area. At the time of ratification of the new agreement, President Frei expressed the hope that through it, the less developed countries might put themselves on an equal footing with the more developed ones in order to make feasible the creation of a Latin American Common Market in 1970.

China (People's Republic of)

Publications emanating from the People's Republic of China were distributed in the United States by two registered agents: Henry Noyes (dba China Books and Periodicals), 2929 24th Street, San Francisco, California and David Rosen (dba China Publications), 95 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Among the major periodicals distributed were the weekly news magazine Peking Review (1,655), the monthly magazines China Pictorial (757), China Reconstructs (699), and Chinese Literature (140). Also, in Chinese, the daily newspaper Renmin Ribao (35) and the magazines Renmin Huabao (306); Hongqi (57); and Minzu Huabao (112). In addition, a number of small books and pamphlets were mailed to libraries and educational institutions.

Reports on "the great proletarian cultural revolution" all but completely filled Red Chinese publications in 1967. The revolution, which has raged throughout China since its initiation by Mao Tse-tung in June of 1966, is described as a broad movement of the Chinese masses aimed at seizing power from "the handful of persons within the Party who are in authority and are taking the capitalist road." Chairman Mao, in initiating the movement, is credited in official reports with the "great discovery" that "class struggle exists in socialist society," and that once the dictatorship of the proletariat has been established, there must be a constant struggle to preserve it from insidious undermining by the bourgeoisie who desire a capitalist restoration. Such a dreaded restoration is reportedly already under way in the Soviet Union, whose leaders are accused by the Chinese of betraying Marxism-Leninism in order to enter into close collaboration with the United States for world domination.

The main task set for China's great cultural revolution in 1967 was for it "to move from the offices, schools, and cultural circles to the factories, mines, and rural areas so that all positions might be captured by Mao Tse-tung's thought." Official Chinese bulletins indicated that the youth of the Red Guard, armed with the little red book of Quotations from Chairman Mao, were going in large numbers into rural and industrial areas and, together with the People's Liberation Army, were leading the masses in overthrowing all bourgeois counter-revolutionaries in authority. However, at the same time as these vanguard groups were being urged to smash all "counter-revolutionary authority," Peking Review also carried numerous articles enjoining their members to strictly observe "proletarian revolutionary authority" and to guard against the dangers of "ultra democracy" and "anarchy." In the same vein, Chinese officials issued strong warnings that state property once seized from the "capitalists" was not to be squandered or misused and that agricultural and industrial production were not to be held back by revolutionary activities.

On the world scene, Red Chinese publications hailed "the magnificent sight of the countryside of the world" -- Asia, Africa, and Latin America -- "encircling the city of the world" -- North America and Western Europe. The peoples of the "oppressed nations" were urged by the Chinese to put into practice Mao Tse-tung's military thinking which was described as "a universal truth that can be applied everywhere" and as "an invincible weapon that guarantees victory in revolutionary wars." According to the Peking Review, the only correct road to the complete liberation of the oppressed nations and peoples is for them to take up guns and wage revolutionary wars on a big scale, "in accordance with Chairman Mao's brilliant teaching that political power grows out of the barrel of a gun."

Applying this general philosophy to particular nations, Red Chinese publications gave especially strong urgings to the peoples of India, Indonesia, and Burma to rebel against their respective "reactionary" governments. In the latter two countries, as well as in British controlled Hong Kong, Peking reports indicated that overseas Chinese were being "unmercifully persecuted" by "bourgeois reactionary authorities in league with United States imperialism and Soviet revisionism." With regard to Vietnam, the Chinese denounced American "peace talk frauds" and declared that for peace to come in the areas, "the United States must stop its aggression, withdraw all its troops and those of its satellites from South Vietnam, and let the Vietnamese people settle their own affairs by themselves." America's position in Vietnam was seen to be weakened in 1967 by the "just struggle of the Afro-Americans within the United States against racial discrimination and for freedom and equal rights."

In other matters, the Chinese hailed in June of 1967 their first explosion of a hydrogen bomb, following upon five smaller nuclear explosions in the past three years. Hsinhua, the official Peking news agency, took the occasion to "solemnly declare once again that at no time and in no circumstances will China be the first to use nuclear weapons," and pledged that China would work for the complete prohibition and destruction of such weapons. However, the United States-Soviet draft treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons was thoroughly denounced as a "concoction" of the two big powers to put all non-nuclear countries in a subordinate position as "protectorates" of the Washington and Moscow "nuclear overlords."

China (Republic of, Taiwan)

Material concerning the Republic of China is distributed in the United States by the Chinese Information Service with offices at 100 West 32nd Street, New York City, and at 141 Battery Street, San Francisco, California. The principal publications were Free China Weekly, a newspaper (8,400); Free China Review, a monthly magazine (400); Chu Kuo I Chou, a weekly newsletter in Chinese (500); News from China, a daily sheet (236); Background on China (227), and Features from China (102), intermittent feature sheets. In addition, the Information Service is engaged in the production and distribution of brief documentary films for television, usually distributed to about 97 stations.

Events in mainland China preoccupied the attention of the Nationalist Chinese press in 1967. The Nationalists characterized the so-called "proletarian cultural revolution" as an intra-party struggle between supporters of Mao Tse-tung and his army chief Lin Piao and supporters of chief of state Liu Shao-chi, which quickly got out of Mao's control and aroused the entire population to do battle with the oppressive Communist regime. All over China the Nationalists reported that workers, peasants and intellectuals were engaged in fierce fighting against Mao's Red Guards and the People's Liberation Army. Free China Weekly carried stories of almost total industrial and agricultural cessation in many areas as workers reportedly engaged in mass strikes and peasants deserted their fields to struggle with the Red Guards. These reports further described the conflict as "one mad scramble for power of conflicting groups, with nobody knowing who is the real authority, or who is being utilized by whom, or even who will be alive tomorrow."

In contrast to this mainland upheaval, Taiwan sources indicated that the economy of their island republic was continuing to advance with great speed. Preliminary figures for the first six months of 1967 reflected an increase in industrial growth of 19.3% and an agricultural increase of 4.6%. The Republic's overall growth rate over the past ten years was set at 9.3%, a rate which, according to Chinese sources, has been the highest of all the developing nations in the world. Per capita income on the island increased in 1966 to $180 and was expected to reach $200 by the end of 1967.

To counteract the reported destruction of Chinese culture by Mao's forces on the mainland, the Nationalists initiated in 1967 the Cultural Renaissance Movement, designed to revive traditional Chinese culture and ethics not only on Taiwan but among Chinese communities throughout the world. This cultural movement was described by one official as "the most important campaign in preparation for our final counter-attack against the Chinese Communists."

In this latter regard, non-government Chinese newspapers were quoted throughout the year as urging the Chiang government to embark on a military action against the mainland. Said one paper, "we hope . . . that the United States will back us morally, and with transport, logistics and sea and air power." The Chinese air force announced that it could launch an air invasion of the mainland with only three hours notice, and that a landing force could be prepared in six hours. However, the Chinese ambassador to the United States was quoted at the beginning of the year as declaring that a successful return of the Chiang Kai-shek government would be largely a political, not a military matter. In a press interview, Ambassador Chow Shu-kai said, "I visualize a situation where there will arise pockets with various shades of inclination. If some pockets are quite near to us (Taiwan) then almost no military operations are required -- there will just be political negotiations."

In another major policy speech, Vice President C.K. Yen warned American audiences in May that if Mao were succeeded by his disciple Lin Piao, the regime in Peking would become even more belligerent, and that a victory for Mao's arch rival Liu Shao-chi could be equally dangerous if it led to a revival of Peiping's alliance with Soviet Russia.

With regard to the fighting in Vietnam, Nationalist sources were unanimous in supporting bombing of the North and in urging even stronger United States action to win a total victory. They dismissed American fears of direct intervention in the fighting by Red China on the grounds that she was too embroiled in internal strife to risk a confrontation with the United States. In an address to Taiwan's Legislative Assembly, Vice President Yen urged the free world to "summon the determination to seek victory," stating that "The Chinese Communists are using Vietnam as a testing ground for their theory of 'people's war'. If Hanoi is successful, the Chinese Communists will surely mount the same kind of conflict in other areas."

Nationalist sources quoted statements from grateful African leaders acknowledging the aid given them by Taiwan's agricultural demonstration teams. According to official reports, the Republic's program of giving agricultural and technical aid to other developing nations expanded in 1967 to encompass 1,000 Chinese working in twenty-four developing countries throughout the world. In return for their assistance, the Nationalists reported a considerable increase in understanding of their position in the United Nations among the developing states.

Cuba

Publications emanating from Cuba were distributed in the United States by Robert Brauer, 761 Ninth Avenue North, St. Petersburg, Florida, a registered agent of the Ministry of Foreign Relations of Cuba. Material disseminated in 1967 included Granma, a weekly newspaper with Spanish and English editions (18 each); Bohemia (Spanish), a weekly magazine (18); and Cuba (Spanish), a monthly magazine (18).

The year 1967, ninth year of the Cuban Revolution, was proclaimed the "Year of Heroic Vietnam" by Premier Fidel Castro. No issue of Granma, official organ of the Communist Party in Cuba, was without reports on "atrocities" supposedly being committed in the Asian nation by the United States "imperialists." Cuban agricultural and industrial laborers were urged in their work throughout the year to emulate the spirit of the heroic Vietcong and North Vietnamese, who were said to be overcoming almost insuperable odds in order to preserve their freedom.

Referring to the effects of the war on the United States economy, Granma articles declared that Americans were being subjected to an overwhelming increase in taxation "due almost solely to the mounting costs of the United States aggression against the Vietnamese people." Characterizing the fighting as "a shocking waste of human resources," Granma spokesmen speculated on the amount of poverty that could be wiped out in the world and in the United States itself with the fabulous sums being spent on the war. Citing statistics reportedly gathered from the American press, the Cubans charged that every airplane shot down meant an average waste of two million dollars.

Cuban support for "revolutionaries" in all parts of the world, including Vietnam, was frequently expressed through the Organization of Solidarity with the Peoples of Africa, Asia, and Latin America (OSPAAAL), a grouping founded in May of 1966 and based in Havana. Through this organization and its offshoot, the Organization for Latin American Solidarity (OLAS), which held its first annual conference in Cuba from July 31 to August 7, 1967, the Cubans "reaffirmed their militant support for all national liberation movements." Within Latin America, the OLAS Conference cited as its main aim "the tightening of the ties of militant solidarity among anti-imperialist fighters," in the belief that the struggle on the continent is "a single struggle -- unanimous and without boundaries -- of all the peoples of Latin America against their natural, common enemy: United States imperialism, and against its lackeys, the governments established in each country to repress the people, to serve imperialism, and to represent the criminal interests of the national oligarchies." Particular support was pledged throughout the year to the revolutionary fighters of Venezuela, Colombia, Guatemala, and Bolivia who were said to have the armed struggle for the rights of the working people already well under way in their respective countries. Under particular attack for "oligarchy" and "pro-imperialism" were the governments of Chile, the Dominican Republic, Argentina, and Brazil.

Present as an honorary delegate to the OLAS Conference was Stokely Carmichael, Negro leader of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee. Carmichael was reported by the Cuban press to have defined "Black Power at the Conference as "the union of the Negro population of the United States with the oppressed peoples of the rest of the world . . . in the struggle against capitalism and imperialism." He reportedly called for "many Vietnams" throughout the world and proclaimed that "When the United States has 50 Vietnams inside and 50 outside, this will mean the death of imperialism."

Within Cuba itself, official publications reported great strides forward in meeting the needs of the people. The Castro government claims that Cuba now has the best medical service in all of Latin America, the lowest mortality rate, and total eradication of illiteracy through compulsory sixth grade education. A host of services were said to be provided to the people free of charge, including university education, children's nurseries "to free women for revolutionary tasks" and telephone service. Cuba's chief problem on the road to Communism was said to be the development of bureaucracy and a "petty bourgeois mentality" within government administration. To curb these trends and at the same time to promote the nation's agricultural production, numerous measures were announced to reduce government overstaffing and to send workers and students into the countryside to work either temporarily or permanently on the State Farms which comprise 70% of Cuba's agricultural land.

Ghana

The Ghana Information Service, 565 Fifth Avenue, New York City disseminated Ghana Today, a bi-weekly news magazine (2,000) and Ghana Review, an occasional magazine (200).

February 24, 1967 marked the first anniversary of the overthrow of the Nkrumah regime by the Ghanaian Armed Forces; however, spokesmen of the new government declared that the Revolution in Ghana was still going on. As expressed by the military leaders, Ghana is now in the second and longest phase of its revolution -- "the clearance of the social and economic mess inherited from the ousted regime." The third phase will reportedly be the establishment of a properly constituted and democratic government, based upon a constitution approved by popular referendum. In a speech at the Liberation Day ceremonies in February, Lt.-General J. A. Ankrah, Chairman of the new government made the statement that "Officers and men of the Armed Forces and the Police are neither interested in politics nor in wielding political power." As reported in Ghana Today the general said further, "Our main objective is to help rebuild the shattered economy of the country, and to remove from our society the gross maladministration, social injustice, bribery and corruption and the flagrant abuse of power which were characteristic of the Government of the ousted regime." According to General Ankrah, the timely intervention of the military in early 1966 saved Ghana from a total economic collapse.

The foreign policy of the military government has been announced as one of "true non-alignment and friendship with all countries." Friendly relations have reportedly been restored with Ghana's immediate neighbors, Togo, Ivory Coast, and Upper Volta; and Ghana's press and radio have reportedly ceased to be instruments of abuse against other countries. On the question of co-operation among African States, government spokesmen have said that Africa now has no scapegoats of colonialism or imperialism to blame should the member states fail to unite and rise above vain prestige and narrow interests. Government officials saw as a major step toward greater unity the formation of a twelve member West African Economic Community at Accra, in May. Included in the aims of the new Community are the elimination of customs and trade barriers and the coordination of agricultural and major industrial development among the member states. To supplement these African efforts, Ghanaian spokesmen called upon the advanced countries in the United Nations to set up a special development fund which would provide the continent with assistance in acquiring new skills and with increased investment in the form of outright financial grants and loans at low interest.

With particular regard to investment in Ghana, the military leaders cite the speed with which economic chaos has been brought under control as an illustration of the strength, determination and stability of their regime. As an additional indicator of stability, the government points to a lifting of the press censorship imposed by the Ghana regime and a lifting of the ban imposed on the importation of overseas newspapers and publications.

With regard to Communist influence in Ghana, the Ankrah Government has announced that "the socialist countries, especially the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China, and Cuba saw in the overthrow of Nkrumah a serious setback to Communist ambitions in Africa." The Ghanaians charge that both the Soviet Union and Red China gave Nkrumah "huge sums of money" after his overthrow to enable him to engage in subversion against Ghana, and that Nkrumah is currently being supported with funds, equipment and guerrilla warfare experts by the Soviet and Cuban embassies in Guinea. They also charge that Cuba's support of Nkrumah exemplifies a total disregard for legitimate African aspirations.

Great Britain

The British Information Service (BIS), 845 Third Avenue, New York City, distributed a wide variety of material relating to Great Britain. Its regular publications were Today's British Papers (503) and British Weeklies (398), composed of reprints of articles on current affairs by British newspapers; British Record (7,704), a bi-monthly political and economic news sheet, and numerous information papers and pamphlets with varying circulation.

Receiving considerable attention in Information Service publications in 1967 was Britain's decision in May to make formal application for membership in the European Common Market. Appearing before the British House of Commons, Prime Minister Wilson is reported to have termed the planned action "a historic decision which could well determine the future of Britain, of Europe and indeed of the world in decades to come." Approval of the move by the House of Commons was by an overwhelming majority vote. British spokesmen indicated that they believe British entry into the market and the involvement of the other European Free Trade Association countries will contribute massively to the economic unity and strength of Europe and that the concept of a powerful "Atlantic partnership" with the United States can be realized only when Europe is able to put forth her full economic strength. As her major contribution to the Community, Britain is emphasizing her technological advancements, particularly in the areas of nuclear development for peaceful uses, in computers, and in aircraft.

Concerning the state of the British economy in 1967, the Chancellor of the Exchequer expressed confidence, early in the year, that the country would be able to earn a surplus on her balance of payments and also to achieve a sustained growth in national output averaging 3% a year up to 1970. However, balance of payments difficulties later in the year, resulting in large part from the Middle East war and closing of the Suez Canal, caused the government to announce in November a 14.3% devaluation of the pound sterling from the equivalent of $2.80 to $2.40. Devaluation and a higher bank interest rate were expected to increase opportunities for British exporters and encourage outside investment in Britain. In moves to reduce overseas defense expenditures, the British Government announced that it would redeploy some forces from Germany to Britain in 1968, although keeping these forces committed to NATO, and that it would effect a 50% reduction of forces in Malaysia and Singapore by 1970-71. It was also announced that the government's contribution to NATO would remain on the same scale, but that forces assigned to SEATO would be progressively altered in nature and size. As another major economy move, Information Service bulletins reported that nationalization of Britain's iron and steel industry would become effective in July.

With regard to world issues, Information Service publications devoted considerable attention to such problem areas as Vietnam, Rhodesia, and the Middle East. Concerning Vietnam, the British Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Brown, in a speech before the United Nations General Assembly in September declared that "it is tragic that the North Vietnamese authorities have declined to grasp the many opportunities to negotiate which have been offered and still remain open to them." Mr. Brown further stated that he joined with those who would "dearly like" the bombing of North Vietnam to stop; but that he "regretted that the leaders of North Vietnam have never said what they will either do or refrain from doing to help the process of peace if the bombing stopped."

Concerning Rhodesia, British leaders announced that their government would continue to insist on "racial non-discrimination and guaranteed progress towards majority rule and full democratic government" and would refuse to accept any form of independence for Rhodesia unless it were acceptable to the people as a whole. British spokesmen also indicated that stringent economic sanctions against the break-away colony would be continued. Concerning the Middle East crisis, Britain's Foreign Secretary made the following statement before the United Nations: "Britain does not accept war as a means of settling disputes nor that a state should be allowed to extend its frontiers as a result of war. This means that Israel must withdraw. But equally, Israel's neighbors must recognize its right to exist, and it must enjoy security within its frontiers."

India

The Information Service of the Embassy of India, National Press Building, 529 14th Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., disseminates two regular publications, India News, a weekly newspaper and Foreign Affairs Record, a monthly magazine. It also distributes an occasional news sheet, Indiagram, and press releases.

Faced with acute food shortages from two successive years of drought, India embarked in 1967 on a crash program designed to attain self sufficiency in food grain production by 1971. According to Embassy reports, public investment in agriculture will increase by more than 100% in the next five years. Particular emphasis will reportedly be given to increased production of chemical fertilizer and to programs offering incentive prices and loans to farmers to aid in the purchase of modern seeds and equipment.

Coinciding with its agricultural program, the Indian Government has launched a massive program of population control. A network of family planning clinics has been set up with the reported goal of bringing the Nation's birth rate down from 41 to 25 per thousand by 1976 and to 18 per thousand by 1985. The importance of this program was revealed in statistics showing that while India's net national income has increased by 76% over the last 15 years, per capita income has risen by only 27% due to the rise in population.

The progress of democracy in India received considerable attention in Embassy publications with the holding of India's fourth general election in February. These reports expressed pride in the fact that since independence twenty years ago, India has weathered four nation-wide elections and the peaceful succession of two prime ministers. The ruling Congress party which was voted back to power but with a greatly reduced majority expressed confidence that the government could be run smoothly despite the coming to power of opposition parties in several states. The secular nature of India's society was said to be reflected in the election to the presidency of Dr. Zakir Husain, a Muslim in a land over 80% Hindu and only 11% Muslim. An India News report in this regard stated that "In a way what India has done in 20 years the United States took 184 years to do when President Kennedy, a Catholic, was elected."

Contrasting affairs in neighboring Pakistan, Embassy reports declared that Pakistan, despite a substantial Hindu population, has no Hindu cabinet minister, and has a Constitution which reportedly bars a non-Muslim from becoming head of state.

India's relations with Pakistan remained unsettled in 1967. The Indians claim that they have made repeated overtures to Pakistan for the establishment of normal economic and trade relations and for a mutual reduction in arms build-up but have been rebuffed on all occasions by Pakistan's insistence that discussions on Kashmir must precede any other negotiations between the countries. India's Defense Minister charged that "Pakistan wishes to keep alive tensions . . . in order to have a sense of national urgency and purpose and foster their own internal solidarity" and that Pakistan receives arms from Red China and is working in collusion with her against India. The Indians expressed great concern at the United States decision in April to resume the supply of spare military parts to Pakistan, claiming that the United States action "will increase Pakistan's intransigence" and "will lead to the creation of fresh tensions and an arms race."

With regard to Red China, Embassy reports charged that her "war of nerves" against India goes on unabated. The Chinese were charged in 1967 with concentration of troops along the Indian border, frequent intrusions into Indian territory, propaganda through loud speakers across the border and maltreatment of Indian diplomats in Peking. An India News article termed Chinese propaganda a crude attempt at subversion and stated that "the root of the conflict between India and China is not the border question, but refusal of the Chinese government to accept the idea of coexistence and its attempts to impose its will and political concepts on the countries of Asia and Africa." The Indian government continued to maintain that the way for Asia to meet the Chinese threat is through economic strength, and, in this regard, expressed a willingness to cooperate with its South East Asian neighbors in economic, non-political and non-military groupings.

The Chinese threat to India was cited as a major reason for Indian hesitancy concerning the nuclear non-proliferation draft treaty proposed at Geneva in 1967. India's Foreign Minister, Mr. Chagla, reportedly declared at Geneva that his country is in a unique position as far as the nuclear question is concerned in that "she is under constant and continuing threat from China which has already exploded the bomb; she is a non-aligned country which is not protected by any military alliance, and she has nuclear capability of a very high order." Mr. Chagla also stated at Geneva that India has renounced building a nuclear armory, but that she could build an atomic bomb within a relatively short time if forced to do so by "the pressure of circumstances beyond her control." India's main objection to the non-proliferation treaty is that it allegedly seeks to maintain the monopoly of nuclear powers by imposing obligations on non-nuclear countries without any obligations on the nuclear countries, including China. The official Indian position is that non-proliferation must be part of a larger concept of general disarmament and that specifically there should be a gradual reduction of the nuclear stockpiles held by the United States and Soviet Union.

With regard to the Vietnam war, India continued to call for a stoppage of bombing by the United States "to help create an atmosphere for the opening of talks" on the basis of the Geneva Agreement.

Indonesia

The Embassy of Indonesia, 2020 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., distributed a bi-weekly news release entitled Indonesian News and Views and a new bi-monthly magazine called Focus on Indonesia.

The power of former President Sukarno in Indonesia came to an official end in March of 1967 with the formal installation of General Soeharto as Acting President of the Republic. According to Embassy reports, General Soeharto will serve as chief executive of Indonesia until a new president is elected by the People's Consultative Assembly, following general elections scheduled for May 1968.

Since the military leadership reportedly halted an attempted Communist coup in October, 1965, its main preoccupation has been the economic rehabilitation of the nation. Highlighted as a major effort in this regard in 1967 was the passage of the Foreign Capital Investment Act, which reopened Indonesia to outside capital investment. Numerous incentives to investment, such as tax exemptions and deduction were said to be offered by the Act, particularly for companies interested in developing Indonesia's rich mineral resources. In addition to the Investment Act, the Indonesian government signed an agreement with the United States Government in January to guarantee American investors against inconvertibility, domestic upheavals, and nationalization. With regard to nationalization, the Soeharto government also began negotiations in 1967 either to return or make financial settlement on all foreign enterprises nationalized by the Sukarno regime.

In her external relations, Indonesia expressed a willingness to explore regional co-operation with her South East Asian neighbors, including Malaysia, in the economic, cultural, and technical fields, but ruled out participation in any military defense pacts. Relations with Red China, on the other hand, were reported to be steadily deteriorating, culminating in a severance of diplomatic ties in October. China was accused of conducting "vicious verbal assaults" against Indonesia through Radio Peking, of maltreating Indonesian diplomats, and of engaging in subversive activities aimed at inciting Chinese residents of Indonesia to wage resistance against the government.

On the Vietnam question, Indonesian officials reiterated their views that American bombing of North Vietnam should be terminated before the commencement of negotiations and that Vietnamese problems could best be solved by the Vietnamese themselves. Of significance in this regard, the Indonesian Ambassador to the United States noted that his country had defended itself against a serious Communist overthrow attempt without sacrificing "a single foreign soldier or a single foreign dollar."

Israel

Two registrants distributed information in 1967 concerning Israel. The Jewish Agency-American Section, 515 Park Avenue, New York City, distributed the Israel Digest, a bi-weekly news magazine (8,000); Israel Among the Nations, a wall newspaper for classroom use; press releases (450); and other publications. The Israel Information Service, 11 East 70th Street, New York City, distributed News from Israel, a bi-weekly newsletter (9,000); Israel, a quarterly magazine (1,500); fact sheets (3,000) and other publications. Approximately forty films were made available for public showing and, in the broadcasting area, the Service sponsors a weekly broadcast entitled Israel Press Review and a monthly broadcast entitled Israel Almanac consisting mainly of interviews with well known personalities.

"It is beyond all honest doubt that between May 14 and June 5, Arab governments, led and directed by President Nasser methodically prepared and mounted an aggressive assault designed to bring about Israel's immediate and total destruction." In these words, Israel's Foreign Minister, Mr. Abba Eban, expressed before the United Nations General Assembly Israel's view of the events leading to the June "Six Days War" between Israel and the Arab World.

In pamphlets and news releases distributed in this country, the Israelis charged that the June fighting was the final link in a chain of provocation initiated in early 1966 by Syria's proclamation of a "'people's war'" against Israel. According to the Israelis, the Syrians conducted from 1966 on an increasingly intensified terrorist campaign against Israel in which water facilities and other installations and communications centers were blown up and in which civilians in homes and farms were "killed, maimed, and terrorized." As reported by the Israelis, Syrian action was followed in mid-May 1967 by a heavy build-up of Egyptian troops on the Sinai Peninsula, by President Nasser's call for the withdrawal of the United Nations Emergency Force from the Peninsula, and by the closing of the Strait of Tiran and Gulf of Aqaba to Israeli shipping.

Parallel to these developments, the Israelis charged that Arab officials roused their people with "a stream of invective and hate" against Israel. In this regard, Israeli press releases quoted numerous Cairo radio statements urging Israel's annihilation. President Nasser was reported to have declared on May 28th: "We intend to open a general assault against Israel. This will be total war. Our basic aim is the destruction of Israel."

Israeli sources also indicted the Soviet Union for what they termed its "provocative role in spreading alarmist and incendiary reports of Israel intentions amongst Arab governments" and "for inflicting the Middle East with a head-long arms race" over the past fourteen years. According to Israeli officials, "the expenditure on social and economic progress of one half of what has been put into the purchase of Soviet arms would have been sufficient to redeem Egypt from its social and economic ills." In the latter regard, Israel's Foreign Minister, Mr. Eban, was quoted at the beginning of the year as declaring that "If only the spirit of coexistence reigns . . . Israel is qualified to co-operate with its neighbors and so advance the Middle East towards a creative upsurge whose like it has not known for many a long generation."

Israel's conditions for a peace settlement after the war were frequently discussed in Information Service bulletins. Foremost among these conditions was a demand for Arab acceptance of Israel's statehood and right to exist. To implement this acceptance, Israel voiced a demand for direct negotiations between itself and each of the contending Arab states, without third party or United Nations intervention. Until such negotiations should take place, Israeli officials emphasized that the cease fire lines would remain as Israel's frontiers. These spokesmen rejected categorically a return to the pre-war boundaries without direct negotiations, on the grounds that "to go back to the situation out of which the conflict arose would mean that all the conditions for renewed hostilities would be brought together again." They also rejected any armistice agreement or, as Foreign Minister Eban expressed it, any other "euphemisms designed to provide our neighbors with an escape route from the necessity of formal inter-state relations." A United Nations role in the negotiations was discounted by the Israelis on the grounds that the world body had illustrated its "inability to assure peace" by the removal of the United Nations Emergency Force from an area of danger "at the very time when this danger approached explosion point."

With regard to the Arab refugee question, the Israel Government on June 29th issued an official statement in these terms, "With the creation of the new conditions in the region, there now exists a situation permitting a general and immediate solution to the refugee problem, with regional and international co-operation." The statement was preceded by an earlier announcement that a top-level committee had been established to draw up a program of refugee rehabilitation in newly occupied areas. With regard to the refugees of 1948, the Israelis charge that the Arab governments have continuously rejected every proposal for their absorption in order that these governments might have a "propaganda weapon" against Israel. It is the Israeli position that "the only constructive solution to the problem is the resettlement of the refugees in Arab countries." Official reports indicated that, provided she were given assistance in the form of international financing, Israel would offer "her wide experience in the planning and execution of rural and urban settlement projects" to achieve this goal.

Resettlement of the refugees within Israel itself was rejected on the grounds that this would constitute suicide. To buttress this position, the Israelis quoted from statements reportedly made by President Nasser to the effect that "If the refugees return to Israel, Israel will cease to exist." In addition, the Israelis claim that what has happened over the past twenty years in the Middle East has been, in effect, a population exchange. They note that Israel, since her birth as a state, has given sanctuary to a million and a quarter Jewish refugees, almost half of which came from Arab League countries. Moreover, Israeli spokesmen claim that the bank accounts of these Jewish emigrants were confiscated by the Arab countries of origin, while all Arab refugees accounts were released to their owners by the Israeli government.

Concerning the dispute over Jerusalem, Israeli reports denied any pressure on Arab residents to flee to Jordan at any time, and detailed measures said to have been taken to restore normal civilian life in the area. In ignoring the United Nations General Assembly Resolution urging Israel's withdrawal from the Jordanian sector of the city, the Israeli government avowed that it would give "effective expression, in co-operation with the world's great religions, to the immunity and sanctity of all the Holy Places."

Shortly after the war, the Government of Israel, together with the World Zionist Organization, issued a statement calling on the Jewish people of the world to immigrate to Israel. The call said, in part, that participation "in this aliyah movement for the up-building of the land of Israel is a sacred obligation for every family to contribute one of its sons in this fateful hour." The statement further said that

"not only men and women are urgently needed," but that "Israel needs capital investors for the establishment of new enterprises and men of learning and science and professional and vocational workers in all fields to place their experience . . . at the store of their people." In a separate statement, the head of the Jewish Agency for Israel described the solidarity of the American Jewish Community with Israel and its outpouring of funds to her during the crisis as "nothing short of phenomenal."

Japan

Among the several registrants representing Japanese trade interests, two presented informational material in addition to the usual product and trade show advertising. These registrants were the United States-Japan Trade Council, 1000 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., an organization made up of American and Japanese business organizations with offices in the United States; and the Japan Steel Information Center, 230 Park Avenue, New York City and 1000 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., an agent of the Kozai Club, Tokyo, a privately financed trade organization. Both groups distributed press releases, pamphlets, and letters to members of Congress.

Both the United States-Japan Trade Council and the Japan Steel Information Center expressed considerable alarm during 1967 at various attempts by the United States steel industry and members of the Congress to impose restrictions on steel imports to this country. In opposing restrictions, these groups offered numerous arguments against protectionist legislation. Principal among these was the claim that "steel imports contribute significantly to containment of the inflationary price spiral in this country." As expressed in one pamphlet, "the reasonable prices of steel imports directly provide anti-inflationary pressure, but, more importantly, they tend to stabilize the prices of domestic steel products through the pressure of competition." These spokesmen also argued that imports force domestic concerns to operate more efficiently and to increase their technological innovations, thereby improving their export capabilities in the world market.

Declaring that protectionists fail to take into account the over-all trade picture of a nation, the free trade spokesmen quoted extensively from economists, government officials and publications like the Wall Street Journal and The Journal of Commerce in support of their position that trade barriers are self-defeating. Said one Trade Council economist in this regard, "If this country should take action to limit imports, United States exports will suffer from foreign retaliation or simply from our customers' inability to buy from us because they cannot sell to us." With particular regard to Japan, Council spokesmen emphasized that while the Asian nation is heavily dependent on sales to the United States, she is also second only to Canada in the purchase of United States goods and services. They also point out that over the past ten years, over-all Japan-United States trade has almost constantly been in favor of the United States. Moreover, Council spokesmen predict that Japan will offer an ever expanding and diversified market for American goods in the future, as the purchasing power and demand of the Japanese consumer for Western "luxury" items increases. Following this same line of argument, the Japan Steel Information Center in one of its pamphlets pointed to the allegedly "record sales and profits of the United States steel industry over the past two years" in posing the question "Is the American steel industry in such danger from Japan's competition that the United States can afford to imperil its exports in a multitude of other areas?"

In more general discussions of Japan and her achievements, a Trade Council pamphlet characterized Japan as "the free world's best hope for leadership in Asia." Continued the publication further, "as a country that has fully demonstrated the superior capacity for growth of a free economy; as the one Asian country that has developed a full and stable pattern of personal freedom and parliamentary democracy; as the only nation in Asia which has demonstrated that Asians too can enjoy an affluent society, Japan will exert increasing influence . . . throughout the less developed world." In further supporting this statement, the Council pointed to the increasing role of Japan in providing development assistance to the rest of Asia, most notably in 1967 with the inauguration of the Asian Development Bank, to which Japan subscribed $200 million. This contribution was said to have marked the first time in post-war history that another nation matched the financial contribution of the United States to an international organization. Among the multinational projects in which the Bank will reportedly participate are the construction of highways, railroads and communications networks linking the countries of Asia. In addition, the Japanese government was reported to have drafted a foreign aid program for 1968 under which aid is expected to surpass $900 million and may reach the $1 billion level. Included in this figure were funds for the Japanese Youth Corps for Overseas Cooperation, described in various sources as "Japan's version of the Peace Corps."

Korea

Two registrants commenced disseminating information on Korea in 1967: The American International Business Research Corporation, 1001 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., a registered agent for the Ambassador of Korea to the United States, which distributed press releases, fact sheets, and speeches of South Korean officials; and International Public Relations Co., Ltd., 230 Park Avenue, New York City, a registrant for the Korea Trade Promotion Corp., 10 West 56th Street, New York City, which distributed trade information. In addition, the Embassy of Korea continued to publish a tri-monthly magazine entitled Korean Report.

The year 1967 marked the inauguration of Korea's second Five Year Plan and publications on the Asian nation were replete with statistics demonstrating the degree of development already achieved under the first Plan. Economic growth during the past five years was said to have averaged 8.5%, with 1966 reaching a high of 11.9%. This rate was compared with an average gain in Southeast Asia of only 3.5%. Per capita income at the end of 1966 was an estimated $123, a reported 42% increase over $87 in 1960.

Exports also were said to have risen at an astounding rate, and a major push in this area was included in the program of the new Five Year Plan. It was announced that particular efforts would be made in the new Plan to attract private capital investments from the United States and West Germany, in order to achieve the two-fold goal of economic construction and expansion of export markets. Numerous tax and other incentives were said to be offered to encourage foreign investment.

Summing up the progress of the last five years, one official declared that Korea has been changing from an "aided nation" to a "trading nation" with a self-sustaining economy. It was stated that Korea's reliance on foreign aid, primarily from the United States, had been reduced from approximately 50 to 60 percent of her budgetary needs to 18% and that it is continuing to decline. Self-sufficiency in food production is planned for 1971, and President Park has reportedly promised his people that with "diligence, saving, and frugality," Korea will emerge as one of the leading industrial nations in Asia by the 1970's. In citing their economic gains, the South Koreans lay particular stress on the fact that the Korean War of the 1950's saw Communist North Korea encompass most of the country's industrial base, including its most valuable mineral resources.

The presidential elections held in Korea in 1967 saw the re-election of President Chung Hee Park to a new four year term. The orderliness of the election was regarded by Korean commentators as an important indicator of democratic stability. President Park is reported to be determined that his nation shall take a position of leadership in Asian affairs, and to believe that the world is entering an Asia-Pacific era. He has pledged that Korea will continue to promote regional ties among non-Communist Asian nations for the goals of common security and prosperity.

In Vietnam, the Korean government continued to maintain a force of 46,000 troops and 10,000 technicians to aid the South. To justify this troop commitment, President Park was reported to have advised his people that "If we fail to block the Communist invasion in South Vietnam, we will lose the whole of Southeast Asia, and the Republic of Korea's own security cannot be guaranteed."

Nigeria

Two registrants represented the conflicting interests in Nigeria in 1967. The firm of Dumbarton Associates, Inc., 120 East 56th Street, New York City, distributed a few pamphlets on behalf of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, while the firm of Ruder and Finn, Inc., 130 East 59th Street, New York City distributed numerous press releases, pamphlets, and letters to Congressmen on behalf of the Republic of Biafra, known until May 30, 1967 as the Eastern Region of Nigeria.

Publications which emanated from the Federal Republic of Nigeria prior to Biafra's secession on May 30, 1967 presented the government of Lt. Col. Yakubu Gowon as one which was sparing no effort to achieve peace and unity in all of the nation's regions. Lt. Col. Gowon was said to see the task of the military government which assumed power in Nigeria in January 1966 as one of "National Reconstruction," based on "the well-being of all Nigerians irrespective of their tribe, religion, or region of origin." Upon taking charge of this government in August 1966, Col. Gowon reportedly pledged to work out a form of political association acceptable to all the regions and to return the country to civilian government "at the earliest opportunity." It was stated that his efforts in this regard were totally rejected by Lt. Col. Ojukwu of the Eastern Region who reportedly "continuously increased his demands as soon as some were met in order to perpetuate the crisis and lead the Eastern Region out of Nigeria." Col. Ojukwu was also charged with "inciting the people of the Eastern Region to hatred of other peoples" and with "indulging in the crudest abuse of members of the Supreme Military Council" ruling the Federal Republic.

The Biafrans, on the other hand, characterized their secession as being forced upon them by the North. According to reports disseminated in this country, the Easterners, as a trading people interested in the large market offered by a united Nigeria, had never been bent on secession. Their loss of faith in unity was said to have come with the massacre of 30,000 Easterners in the North during 1966 and the succeeding refusal of Lt. Col. Gowan to offer compensation to the nearly two million Easterners forced to flee back to the East. Under the circumstances, Biafran reports indicated that the Eastern Region was "forced to look inward to plan for its own people and destiny."

The Easterners also took the position that the state of Nigeria has been an unnatural union from its very formation by the British. Their official statements stressed that the Muslim North and Christian South (composed of Eastern and Western regions) are separated by different languages, customs, historical background and stages of development. These long standing differences were said to be aggravated with the advent of British colonialism, since the East allegedly adapted quickly to Western education and culture while the North under the rule of "feudal emirs" did not. The Easterners claim that the only form of union of Nigeria desired by the North is one of conquest and domination, and in this regard, they charged that Muslim leaders had openly characterized the struggle with Biafra as a continuation of the North's "interrupted conquest to the sea." For their part, the Easterners proposed replacing the old Federation, beset by constant power struggles among the regions, with a loose association of sovereign states whose ties would be purely economic, social and cultural, and not political. With regard to political unity, one press release quoted from a statement made by a group of American visiting professors, to the effect that "In existing circumstances -- when Easterners run an imminent risk of violent death if they set foot outside their own Region . . . talk of 'Nigerian unity' has about as much reality as talk about 'Arab-Israel solidarity.'"

The Biafrans claim that the act of secession was at last forced upon them by the Gowan government's refusal to honor promises made at a meeting of all sides in Ghana in January 1967. Specifically, the North was accused of embarking on an extensive arms build-up, refusing to reorganize the army in order to eliminate one man control, refusing to compensate the Easterners driven from the North, encouraging acts of subversion and sabotage within the East, and ignoring promises made in connection with regional autonomy, revenue allocations, and government appointments. The "straw that broke the camel's back" was reportedly the attempt by the Gowon government to "arbitrarily divide" the East into three states with three separate governors, while at the same time dividing the North, with two-thirds of Nigeria's area and over half of her population, into six states unified under a single governor. The Biafrans also charged that the North had refused "with contempt" the offers of African Heads of State and the Organization of African Unity to mediate the dispute, and instead had turned to Great Britain and the Soviet Union for "massive military aid."

In addition to political commentary, Biafran bulletins carried information on the economic development of their region and on opportunities for foreign investment. According to these reports, Biafra has "the richest pool of natural resources and skilled, educated manpower in Africa," and should one day be the "Rhur of West Africa."

Pakistan

The Embassy of Pakistan distributes Pakistan Affairs, a bi-weekly news bulletin, Interim Report Series, a monthly report sheet on economic developments, and occasional pamphlets.

Pakistan's economic development over the twenty years since independence received considerable attention in Embassy reports. The third Five Year Plan now in operation (1965-1970) was characterized as "an open invitation to foreign investors," who were promised "incentives and exemptions . . . competitive with the most liberal offered by any country in the world." Pakistan's over-all policy was characterized as one of "economic liberalism," with the greatest emphasis being accorded to the growth of private enterprise. Development was claimed to be unhindered by "rigid government controls or doctrinaire philosophies." The importance of this development was summarized by one government spokesman in the following manner: "Pakistan's massive experiment in developing the private sector and promoting the private enterprise system serves as an insurance policy for the future of the concept of private initiative in Asia.

Pakistan's longstanding dispute with India over the state of Kashmir continued to be a major topic of discussion in publications distributed here. Pakistani spokesmen continued to declare that the "only solution" to the problem can be the plebiscite allegedly agreed to by both sides before the United Nations in 1948 and 1949. The official Pakistani position is that "until the people of Kashmir are given the right to decide their own future . . . neither mutual distrust will go, nor shall Pakistan feel secure from India." With regard to the elections held in Kashmir in February as part of India's general elections, an Embassy bulletin quoted extensively from a London Economist article which read, in part, as follows: "In the Kashmir valley . . . elections are quite different from those in the rest of India. Important sections of opinion are barred from participation by constraints, legal or otherwise . . ." Kashmiri leaders "are in detention, their newspapers muzzled and their headquarters under government custody."

With regard to arms spending by both countries, the Pakistanis claim that India's military budget is five times her own and that by its "continued amassing of war material," India is "trying to establish its hegemony over smaller countries on its periphery and turn them into its satellites." Pakistan's own military expenditures were reportedly unilaterally cut in the 1967-68 budget, in order to aid her economic development; but negotiations with India on arms limitation were ruled out unless the subject of Kashmir was included in the talks. The Pakistanis expressed dismay in April at the United States decision to stop arms supply to both India and Pakistan, describing the move as "fraught with serious effect on Pakistan's security." Pakistan's Foreign Minister predicted that the American decision would "embolden India to become more intransigent in her attitude toward Pakistan."

On the subject of nuclear armaments, Pakistan accused India of playing a game of "nuclear see-saw" since 1960 in order to buy time for the manufacture of nuclear weapons. The claim was made in this regard that India has consistently balked over permitting inspection of her nuclear reactors (primarily supplied by Western nations) by the International Atomic Energy Agency to insure that they are being used only for peaceful purposes. In addition, the Pakistanis claim that "any doubt about the Indian position on proliferation" was removed in November 1966 when India cast the only negative vote on a United Nations General Assembly resolution calling for a conference of non-nuclear powers as a move towards checking the spread of nuclear weapons and strengthening the concept of nuclear-free zones. In commenting on a May 1966 statement reportedly made by India's Foreign Minister Singh to the effect that India might have to proceed with the development of nuclear energy for "non-peaceful purposes," Pakistan warned that "it is obvious that if India has the bomb the smaller countries of the region will be compelled by the sheer necessity for survival to manufacture it themselves," and a nuclear arms race will begin in the area.

Portugal

Two registrants represented Portuguese interests during the year: Casa de Portugal, 570 Fifth Avenue, New York City, which distributed a daily information bulletin in Portuguese (51) to United States newspapers and radio stations, and a less frequent bulletin in English, in collaboration with the Portuguese News Agency of Lisbon; and Downs and Roosevelt, Inc., 1629 K Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., which represents the Overseas Companies of Portugal (OCP), an organization of companies having business interests in Portugal and Portuguese overseas territories. OCP publications consisted of booklets describing living conditions and economic opportunities in Portuguese Africa.

Casa de Portugal news bulletins distributed here in 1967 continued to give emphasis to discussion of Portugal's "overseas provinces" in Africa. Growth and progress was said to be evidenced in these territories by "new schools, social welfare and medical facilities, roads, modern docks, sophisticated industrial techniques and new buildings." A strong conviction was expressed that international events in the future would fully justify Portugal's position in Africa. Secretary General U Thant of the United Nations came under attack for reportedly declining a repeated Portuguese invitation to visit the provinces of Angola and Mozambique in order to determine if the Portuguese presence there is a threat to world peace and security. Portuguese spokesmen charged that the Secretary General in refusing their invitations perpetuated the "vicious circle," whereby the United Nations allegedly becomes a forum for accusations against Portugal, while refusing to investigate the basis of these accusations.

The ABC television network in the United States also came under sharp attack for producing in September what was termed the "most biased of all documentaries on Portuguese Africa ever exhibited by any television station." ABC was accused of misleading the American public about Angola and Mozambique by ignoring evidences of racial equality and social and economic progress within the provinces and concentrating instead on statements made by an alleged "terrorist leader" operating from a foreign country and receiving assistance from Communist nations.

Also with regard to Africa, the Portuguese Foreign Ministry "categorically rejected" allegations in August of Portuguese aid to anti-government mercenaries in the former Belgian Congo, while at the same time it accused the Congolese authorities of "publicly acknowledging the supporting, arming, and fomenting of terroristic attempts against the Portuguese Overseas Province of Angola."

Portuguese Angola

Opposition to Portugal's rule in Africa was expressed by the Angola Office, 503 Fifth Avenue, New York City, an agent of the Angolan National Liberation Front (FLNA) and the Angolan Revolutionary Government in Exile (GRAE), which distributed the bulletin, Free Angola (250). The Angola Office stated the principal purpose of its foreign principal is "to free Angola from the Colonial yoke." During the past year, Free Angola claimed the Portuguese army was bombarding Angolan villages to stop the nationalist activities. With regard to Pope Paul's trip to Portugal to visit the Shrine of the Virgin Mary at Fatima, it was suggested that the real motive for the trip was to boost the sagging morale of the devout Portuguese people with "sermons enriched with religious sentimentalism" since morale was low due to domestic tensions and the fighting in Angola. The Angola bulletin also reported that Holden Roberto, President of GRAE, said his forces numbering 30,000 regular troops controlled an area in Angola about the size of Great Britain and that they are opposed by 80,000 NATO equipped Portuguese troops who are supported by planes sold to Portugal by West Germany and by the United States, through the Central Intelligence Agency. When asked about decolonization of southern Africa, President Roberto is reported to have said it is no secret that Portugal, South Africa and Rhodesia wish to create a bastion of white settlers there and that he could only advise his brothers from these territories to give up their pacifist and non-violent illusions and prepare for war.

Rhodesia

The Ian Smith Government of Rhodesia maintains an information office at 2852 McGill Terrace, N. W., Washington, D. C. Its publications consist of Rhodesian Commentary, a bi-weekly publication (12,000); Rhodesian Viewpoint, a frequent two-page sheet of general commentary (2,100); Press Comment on Rhodesia, two pages of reprints from the American press concerning Rhodesia; and a number of pamphlets oriented toward improving trade and commerce in Rhodesia. The Information Office also makes available a number of films for interested parties.

The material distributed by the Rhodesian Information Office dealt principally with the legitimacy of the Rhodesian declaration of independence from Great Britain in November 1965 and supported the position of the Ian Smith Government that the Rhodesian people were a responsible people, capable of governing themselves through popular mandate. They disclaimed any continuing authority over Rhodesia by the British Government. Other principal topics discussed in the publications are the invocation of economic sanctions against Rhodesia by the Security Council of the United Nations, preparations for drafting a new constitution, Rhodesia's economic diversification, and the improvement of conditions for Black Africans.

A government spokesman claimed that in spite of economic sanctions invoked by the United Nations, many of the world's trading nations still found ways to trade with Rhodesia. While acknowledging that it has been necessary to cut back production on the important tobacco crop, the land formerly used for tobacco is now said to be used for growing other crops which previously had to be imported. They claimed that the man in the street had suffered relatively little serious inconvenience or additional expense as a result of the sanctions.

The Rhodesian Government condemned the Security Council of the United Nations for invoking sanctions without allowing Rhodesia to be heard and it disputed the right of Great Britain to take the Rhodesian question to the United Nations. The argument was made that the action of the Security Council violated the United Nations Charter which prohibits intervention into the domestic affairs of a State. Rhodesia additionally objected to the view that its actions were a threat to world peace and that therefore the Security Council could legitimately take action under a chapter of the United Nations Charter dealing with breaches of peace and threats of aggression. The remarks of the former Secretary of State Dean Acheson were cited with approval when he was reported to have said that the United States ought to veto Britain's call for United Nations sanctions because it required a backwards piece of reasoning to say that Rhodesia was a threat to world peace.

In March, the government announced that a Constitutional Commission had been sworn in to report on a new constitution. Prime Minister Ian Smith declared the Rhodesian Government would not relinquish independence nor give new concessions in any further talks with the British Government; he said time was running out for a settlement with Britain and once the Constitutional Commission reported, the government would act and then it would be too late for any further talks. At an earlier date, the Prime Minister said it was decided to lift censorship within the country and to set up a tribunal to investigate the cases of certain detained persons who claimed to have been held in custody merely for political reasons.

As for black African development, the government says it was progressing despite the sanctions and reduced trade; however, it contends that an ironic situation has been created in which the sanctions have not brought down the Smith Government but have had a depressing effect on the country's economic growth, and therefore on the welfare and advancement of her black population. Prime Minister Smith is reported to have stated during a press conference that his government was not changing its policy on multiracialism. His comment was made in response to a question on whether the government was moving towards apartheid. The Smith Government has in the past said there is no discrimination on the grounds of race in Rhodesian political or social life. According to these sources the vote is open to any Rhodesian, regardless of race, who can conform to certain minimal standards. The government also claims to have the support of the Rhodesian Council of African Chiefs which is said to be opposed to the United Nations sanctions.

Another matter of concern to Rhodesia was reported incursions into its territory by terrorists. The government accused its northern neighbor, Zambia, of harboring Communist-trained terrorists who cross the border to infiltrate and fight in Rhodesia. In this affair the government claims the support of the black opposition members of the Rhodesian Parliament who are said to have expressed their abhorrence of the terrorist activities in Rhodesia.

Rhodesia also reported closer ties with its southern neighbors, South Africa and the Portuguese territories of Angola and Mozambique. Much of the Information Office's publications were, in fact, concerned with bettering Rhodesia's relations with her African neighbors and especially with the United States. As stated by the Ian Smith Government, Rhodesia sought basically four things from the United States: friendship; understanding of the problems involved in perpetuating the values of western culture in Africa; support of the United Nations Charter principle of non-interference in the domestic affairs of nations; and trading opportunities on a regular commercial basis. Rhodesia claimed that in return for these benefits she would offer to the United States: a determined bulwark against Communism in Africa; a self-sustaining economy not requiring foreign aid; a profitable area for investment; and an expanding market for American exports.

South Africa

The Information Service of South Africa, 655 Madison Avenue, New York, distributes several publications dealing with that country. Included are News from South Africa, a weekly bulletin of financial and general news items (8,300), South African Digest, weekly news magazine (18), South African Scope, a monthly magazine of general information (15,000), South African Panorama, a monthly pictorial magazine (3,000), and a number of pamphlets distributed intermittently.

A large number of the articles in the South African publications were devoted to an explanation and justification of the government policy of "apartheid" or separate development of the races. Within this framework, the government foresees the formation of separate states for the whites and for the blacks and the development of the greatest degree of governmental autonomy for the Coloured people and for the Indians. When this stage is reached, the government envisions South Africa as a commonwealth based on political independence and economic interdependence.

Many of the publications distributed by the Information Service describe in detail government programs for the development of the black African in the areas of education, health, housing and welfare services. It was said that by the early sixties most of the black slums had been cleared with the vast majority of those persons in need being provided with decent shelter, and that illiteracy will be wiped out within this generation. Health services for the non-white in South Africa are described as better than those of any other non-white community in Africa.

Concerning its foreign affairs, the government was critical of the United Nations action in terminating South Africa's mandate over South West Africa. Secretary General U Thant was reported to have been informed in a note that South Africa will continue to administer the trust territory and that "it has no intention of abdicating its responsibilities towards the people of South West Africa." South African officials also charged that a new practice of encouraging hostile and biased propaganda against member states has been introduced in the United Nations, even by the organization itself. In its relations with other African nations, South Africa says it is pursuing a policy of co-operation with her immediate neighbors. Based on mutual trade interests, talks were held with leaders from the newly independent nations of Lesotho and Botswana. It was also announced that a trade agreement had been signed between South Africa and Malawi and later in the year the two countries established diplomatic relations and exchanged Charge d'Affairs.

Other matters carried in the Information Service publications were arguments for increasing the base price of gold noting that South Africa is virtually the sole supplier of the Western World's gold and it is one of the country's major exports. The West was also frequently reminded of the strategic importance of South Africa along the sea route to the east at least as long as the Suez Canal remains closed. Another concern of the government was South Africa's continued participation in the Olympic Games. Prime Minister Vorster in a statement of policy said it would be possible for non-whites to compete at the Olympic Games with whites as one team; however, inside South Africa there would be no mixed sporting events. On the Rhodesian issue, the Prime Minister felt that South Africa has acted correctly throughout the dispute maintaining friendly relations with Britain and Rhodesia but he said the prosperity and stability of southern Africa demands that the problem be solved and he felt an honorable solution is possible.

Spain

The Embassy of Spain continued to distribute Spanish Newsletter, a monthly. Again, as in the previous year, the further growth of the economy was emphasized. Statistics, mainly for 1966, included the following: Per capita income reportedly rose to $630 and the rate of unemployment was 1.2%, lower than during the previous year. Agricultural production rose substantially with increases in wheat, barley, oats and rice. Steel output and the production of motor cars likewise rose, and there was an increase of 21% in the number of tourists from foreign countries visiting Spain. It was also noted that there were fewer Spaniards who emigrated to foreign countries. In fact, for the first time since 1960 the Spanish emigrants who returned to Spain from European countries outnumbered those who emigrated. Goals set by the National Housing Plan for the construction of housing units were exceeded and the foreign-trade balance improved since imports rose only by 1.8% while exports rose by 10.7%. It was also noted that Spain's rapid increase in private ownership of cars had been stimulated in large part by the rising standard of living of the people. It was claimed that during the first 8 months of 1967 foreigners bought securities on the Madrid stock exchange totaling more than 56 million dollars, an increase of more than 15 million dollars over the corresponding period of the previous year.

It was also noted that Spanish trade with Eastern European countries and mainland China had grown markedly in recent years. The Spanish authorities and Spanish exporters were reported to look forward to seeing trade with eastern countries take third place after the Common Market and the Free Trade Zone. It was also announced that the Spanish Government had signed an agreement with Rumania to establish consular and commercial relations, and an agreement with the Soviet Union permitting Russian vessels on a reciprocal basis to enter Spanish ports for commercial purposes.

Considerable attention was given to the dispute between Spain and Great Britain over Gibraltar. It was pointed out that the British had seized Gibraltar by force over 250 years ago and had held it by force ever since, and it was asserted that in a time when colonial occupation was unacceptable even in Africa and Asia it was intolerable in Europe. In response to the argument allegedly advanced in England that Great Britain should never return Gibraltar to the Government of General Franco it was asserted that Spanish political leaders, Socialists as well as Republicans, felt as deeply about Gibraltar as anyone now in office, and had so publicly stated.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Printed material emanating from the Soviet Union in 1967 was disseminated by four registered organizations: Four Continent Book Corporation, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City; Imported Publications and Products, 1 Union Square, New York City; Cross World Books and Periodicals, 333 South Wacker Drive, Chicago, Illinois; and Eastern News Distributors, Inc., 155 West 15th Street, New York City. This material consisted of books, journals, periodicals, reviews, newspapers, pamphlets, etc. Included within this material are New Times, a weekly news magazine (300); International Affairs, a monthly journal (260); Soviet Woman (35), Culture and Life (100), and Soviet Union (125), monthly pictorial magazines; Sputnik, a monthly digest (24,000); and Moscow News, a weekly newspaper (9,670).

The fiftieth anniversary of the October Revolution in 1917 was the occasion for extolling the achievements of the Soviet Union. In the lifetime of one generation, according to one Soviet propagandist, the Soviet people moved forward from capitalist rule to a society without exploitation; from political disenfranchisement to socialist democracy; from oppression to freedom and equality; from ignorance and illiteracy to culture for the masses and impressive advances in science and technology.

The ideas generated by the October Revolution were said to have spread throughout the world, rousing subjugated people to fight oppression and win freedom and independence. Although the Soviet people stood in the forefront in the workers' fight for freedom and social progress, Soviet propaganda emphasized that the chief goal of the Soviet and socialist states was peace. The Soviets were shown as seizing every opportunity to promote peace and achieve a just settlement of international disputes, to lessen world tensions and normalize international relations.

The one supreme impediment to world peace, according to Soviet propaganda, was the United States pursuing a policy of imperialism and aggrandizement. The United States was described as giving lip-service to its expressed desire for peaceful coexistence, but as being intent only on promoting its hegemony in the world.

According to Soviet publications, the Vietnam war and the Arab-Israeli conflict were but implementations of this policy of imperialism. The Soviets claimed that without the tacit encouragement and support of the United States, the Israelis would never have dared launch their attack. The Israelis were seen by the Soviets as spearheading a drive to control the Middle East for the United States. But the Soviets stressed that the Israelis would not succeed in this endeavor any more than the United States in Vietnam.

The United States itself was described as waging a war on two fronts -- one abroad against Vietnam -- and one at home against the Negroes. According to Soviet publications, the desperation accumulated through decades and multiplied by the failure of the American Government to come to grips with the causes of the revolt in the Negro ghetto was what made the present racial conflict in the United States so sharp and irreconcilable. The Soviet spokesman could find no parallel in the past to what was now happening in United States cities except the Civil War -- this time, it was claimed, a war between the reactionary dominant classes and the oppressed and downtrodden of the nation.

The war in Vietnam, according to Soviet publications a war of imperialism and aggression waged by reactionary dominant classes, was said to be proving most unpopular with the young, the students and the enlightened of the nation. Hence, it was said, the voices of dissidence were heard throughout the land, in universities and on public rostrums.

The Soviet writers saw a connection between the disturbances in the Negro ghetto and the war in Vietnam in that the latter was proving to be so costly that it was preventing the adoption of measures to satisfy the legitimate demands of Negro leaders to combat the mass poverty and squalor of the Negro ghetto. Soviet writers professed to see no escape from this asserted dilemma unless the United States abandoned its war in Vietnam.

It was noted that Soviet writers, especially when treating of the war in Vietnam, and the student and Negro dissidence in the United States, made ample use of statements and pronouncements by American notables to support their views and arguments.

Yugoslavia

The Yugoslav Information Center, 816 Fifth Avenue, New York City, distributes Yugoslav News Bulletin (1,997) and Yugoslav Facts and Views (1,997), intermittent news sheets; Yugoslav Life (300) a monthly newspaper; and a number of booklets.

These publications devoted much space to the Economic Reform which is being carried out in Yugoslavia. Emphasis was given to the need for unification of industrial establishments and the development of specialization in labor, the quality and variety of production, and the adaptation of production to the needs of export. These were recognized as the more important problems confronting Economic Reform in Yugoslavia if exports were to reach the level necessary for the further development of the country.

Of great concern to the Yugoslavs as revealed in their publications was the Arab-Israeli conflict. The Near East was said to have always been an area of unrest because of the pressures brought upon the Arab peoples by those powers which cannot reconcile themselves to the emancipation of the Arab peoples from colonial and imperialist subjection. Israel was branded by the Yugoslavs as the aggressor in the Middle East conflict. The attack was described as one against the territorial integrity of sovereign members of the United Nations and as an attempt at conquest aimed at redrawing the frontiers in the Near East and at expanding territory by means of military might. President Tito's statement that "the government and the peoples of Yugoslavia fully support the UAR and the other Arab peoples in their opposition to aggression" was given wide circulation.

Developments in Vietnam showed, according to Yugoslav publications, that in spite of many peaceful statements, the United States was disregarding the demand of the democratic public for an end to the war in Vietnam and was endeavoring to impose a solution exclusively by military means. Thus the United States was said to be assuming the entire responsibility for the unforeseeable consequences to peace and security in the world, since, according to these publications, it was obvious that only an end to aggressive acts and to the bombing of North Vietnam could lead to conditions for a peaceful solution on the basis of the Geneva Agreements and in keeping with the lawful rights of the Vietnamese people.

The cooperation between Yugoslavia and Greece on a basis of mutual respect, non-interference and joint interests was seen as having been jeopardized by the military coup in Greece. The forces that carried out the coup were said not to be ready to maintain relations with Yugoslavia.

Nevertheless, the situation in Europe in 1967 was viewed as having improved since the time of the cold war, owing in part to the efforts made by the Yugoslav Government and to the co-operation of the non-aligned countries.

The principal purpose of Congress in enacting the Foreign Agents Registration Act was to require public disclosure by persons engaging in propaganda activities and other activities for or on behalf of foreign governments, foreign political parties, and other foreign principals, so that the Government and the people of the United States may be informed of the identity of such persons and may appraise their statements and actions in the light of their associations and activities. The emphasis of the Department of Justice in its administration of the statute has been toward the achievement of this purpose. In performing its functions, the Department has continued to rely upon its normal sources of information and upon the investigative efforts of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Registration under the Act does not imply recognition by the United States Government either of the de jure existence or legality of the foreign principal, nor does registration indicate approval by the United States Government of the propaganda material disseminated or of the activities of the registered agent.

Respectfully submitted,

Attorney General
