REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES ON THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE
FOREIGN AGENTS REGISTRATION ACT OF 1938, AS AMENDED
FOR THE CALENDAR YEAR 1968

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA IN CONGRESS ASSEMBLED:

I have the honor to report on the administration of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, pursuant to Section 11 of that Act, which requires the Attorney General from time to time to report to the Congress concerning the administration of the Act, as well as the nature, source and content of political propaganda disseminated or distributed by agents of foreign principals registered under the Act.

It has been the policy of the Department since 1950 to prepare a report each year. This report covers the administration and enforcement of the Foreign Agents Registration Act for the calendar year 1968.

STATISTICAL SUMMARY

In 1968, fifty-two new registration statements were filed and 74 registrations were terminated, resulting in a total of 446 active registrations on file as of December 31, 1968. There were 344 short-form registration statements filed by individuals as officers, directors, employees or other persons rendering assistance to a registrant for or in the interest of the registrant's foreign principal.

During this same year, 103 amendments were filed to correct deficiencies in registration statements on file. The staff of the Registration Section reviewed 759 supplemental statements and processed 7,208 pieces of both incoming and outgoing correspondence which involved other government agencies, registrants and the general public.

ADMINISTRATION AND ENFORCEMENT

The Department employs normal administrative procedures to effect compliance with the Act, and all investigations are conducted by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. A careful review of all statements and exhibits filed produced many requests by the Department for additional information or other corrective action from registrants, and as indicated above, resulted in the submission of 103 amendments to statements on file. As an additional result of these procedures, no prosecutive action for wilful violations of the Act was required to be initiated during the year.

The Department has also continued the practice of disseminating copies of registration statements and supplements thereto to interested departments and agencies of the Federal Government as well as to certain Congressional committees.

NATURE, SOURCE AND CONTENT OF POLITICAL PROPAGANDA

The following is an analysis of the principal trends noted during 1968 in the propaganda material disseminated within the United States in the English language on behalf of foreign principals and geographical areas listed below. Principal publications are set forth together with the approximate circulation figures per issue.

During the year 1968, 4,663 dissemination reports were filed in connection with the distribution of 17,781 different pieces of propaganda which were submitted with the reports.

Arab States

I. The League of Arab States, which is composed of Algeria, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, United Arab Republic, and Yemen, maintains the Arab Information Center (AIC), 405 Lexington Avenue, New York, New York, with branches located in Washington, D. C., Chicago, San Francisco, and Dallas. The two principal publications of the AIC, in addition to press releases and pamphlets, are Arab News and Views, a monthly news sheet (23,000); and Arab World, a bimonthly magazine (18,200).

AIC publications placed primary emphasis on criticizing Israeli conduct following the Arab-Israeli fighting in June, 1967. In the May, 1968 issue, Arab World stated that with Israel continuing "its campaign to eradicate every trace of Arab Palestine, the existence of the Palestinian people has become the key issue in the Middle East." The AIC claimed that before a compromise between the Arabs and Israelis is possible, the Israeli leaders must give up their chauvinistic aims and recognize the rights of the Palestinian Arabs. The Arabs emphasized that it was intolerable that the Palestinians were living under what they called conditions of strict military control and "mass terror."

With the Arab refugee question being the key to a negotiated peace in the eyes of the League, AIC editorials charged that Israel refused to provide for the refugees and thus refused to negotiate. With reference to a United Nations refugee resolution calling upon Israel to repatriate or compensate the refugees, the Arabs charged that "Israel has since repudiated its responsibility toward those it uprooted and has turned a deaf ear toward each renewed United Nations appeal." In support of the Arab position demanding an end to the "forced occupation of Arab land" and subjugation of Arab people, Arab World quoted Sir Anthony Nutting, Great Britain's Minister of State and Foreign Affairs, as appealing to the United States to "use (its) influence on Israel to accept an honorable peace" as had been offered by the Arabs.

To further emphasize its claim that Israel only wanted war and disdained peace, the AIC often accused the Israelis of consistent terrorist attacks. United Arab Republic spokesman, Muhammed Hassan el-Zayyat is reported to have stated that "We are faced with a persistent, arrogant refusal by Israel to live by anything but force."

The Israeli "aggression," the Arabs claim, is a result of Western imperialism and world Zionism. The Arabs see the very formation of the Israeli state as a result of European colonialism which has now progressed to a point where Israel is "a Western outpost in Eastern lands," with no hope in sight for a lessening of Arab-Israeli tensions until Israel throws off Western influence and domination. Gamal Abdul Nasser is reported to have stated that "the Israeli enemy, supported by world Zionism and world imperialism, is not satisfied with its 1948 aggrandizement, but wants further expansion."

II. The Palestine Arab Delegation (PAD), 441 Lexington Avenue, New York, New York, representing the Lebanon-based Arab Higher Committee for Palestine, disseminated intermittent press releases and letters to United Nations and United States officials (average circulation of 800).

Releases of the PAD continuously attacked the United States, Great Britain and Secretary U Thant of the United Nations for what it considered to be inaction and Zionist favoritism. One release, a letter to Secretary U Thant, entitled "Diary of Crimes by Zionist Jews in the Gaza Strip," charged U Thant with failing to implement the Security Council's resolution calling upon Israel to "insure the safety, welfare and security" of the Palestinian Arab refugees.

United Nations Ambassador Goldberg and Vice President Hubert Humphrey bore the brunt of the PAD attacks upon the United States. The Arabs accused Vice President Humphrey of supporting the Jews merely to gain the large Jewish vote in the United States, while Ambassador Goldberg allegedly contrived "to divert the deliberations of the Security Council" in its attempt to eliminate what the Arabs saw as Israeli aggression.

In general, the PAD reported the United States to be "privy and (an) accessory to the Zionist war of aggression of June, 1967" and described the United States Government as "committed to obstructing any action taken against the Zionist aggressors by the United Nations."

III. The Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), 801 Second Avenue, New York, New York, representing the organization of the same name in Cairo, Egypt, distributed pamphlets, press releases and an infrequent newsletter entitled Palestine Issue (8,000).

The PLO, like other Arab sources, emphasized the theme of Israeli oppression in the occupied Arab lands and the United Nations ineffective handling of the situation. In Palestine Issue the PLO stated "the Arab people know that because of the prejudice of the United States and some Western powers, the Security Council will never implement its resolutions against 'Criminal Israel' . . ." and that the "Arab Palestine people have been experiencing bias, neglect and injustice at the hands of the United Nations." The action that was taken by the United Nations was likewise attacked and its resolutions were condemned by the PLO as demanding too much of the Arabs and too little of the Israelis. To a United Nations resolution calling upon the Arabs to respect the territorial integrity and political independence of Israel in return for withdrawal of Israeli forces from the occupied Arab lands, a PLO editorial in Palestine Issue responded, "And who on earth would think that people with sane minds would ask the Arab people to accept such an insane resolution"? The attitude of the Organization is that since the present troubles are a result of criminal Zionist expansionism, the Arabs should be asked to give up nothing. The Arabs drew a comparison between Israel and Hitler's Germany claiming that "Hitler's goal was a Nazi Empire in Europe and the Israeli goal is a Zionist Empire in the Middle East."

With regard to the issue of the Arab refugees, the PLO declared that since the United Nations had failed to find a solution for settling the refugees, perhaps force was the only answer, and it frequently extolled the efforts of the "Fedayeen" or Arab freedom fighters to "liberate Arab Palestine from Israel."

IV. Information pertaining to Saudi Arabia was distributed through the public relations firm of Hill & Knowlton, Inc., 150 East 42nd Street, New York, New York. This firm occasionally issues press releases on the Kingdom and distributes an infrequent news sheet (average circulation of 1,000).

Most articles on Saudi Arabia dealt primarily with what one article termed "the giant strides toward modernization now taking place in the rapidly developing nation of Saudi Arabia." An official document of the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency is reported to have claimed extensive increases in Saudi Arabian productivity for the year 1967. Over 1,000 miles of new roadway were completed; exports had increased from $939.2 million to $1.7 billion; and the oil industry continued to grow.

Although Saudi Arabia is oil-rich, it is water-poor, and of special interest in publications dealing with Saudi Arabia is the new desalination project in which the role of American technological aid was greatly publicized. Ultimately, the articles report, the sea and United States aid will contribute to a better life for the Saudi Arabs.

The articles further stated that Saudi Arabia owes a great deal to United States influence for helping the "modern renaissance" in Saudi Arabia to evolve. Besides importing many American products, Saudi Arabian officials admit to also importing many American ideas such as modern architecture and television which is "helping brighten and broaden the lives of Saudi Arabs."

Australia

The Australian News & Information Bureau, 636 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York, distributed the Australian Daily News (415), Australian News Weekly Roundup (1,947), Australian Monthly Finance and Commerce Notes (206), and two other monthly publications, the Australian Science Newsletter (83), and the Australian Agricultural Newsletter (85).

The consistent theme developed in most of the Bureau's publications was that Australia is a growing nation interested in her rapidly developing world prestige and in the defense and security of Southeast Asia and the Pacific.

On the domestic scene, the Australians claimed that the size of their nation's economy could double within the next thirteen years. Mr. John Gorton, the Australian Prime Minister, described the nation's 1968-1969 budget as a welfare budget. Assuring the people of the nation's defense posture, Mr. Gorton continued to say, "In the years ahead, the amount spent on defense will grow in volume. Australia's capacity to fight will grow and the industrial capacity to back the fighting forces will also expand. Defense will not be neglected." The budget was reportedly designed to meet many needs such as building population, strengthening industry, developing resources, and improving education and technology. The Government seemed to be making an attempt to solve the age-old "guns or butter" dilemma by claiming that meeting these needs would improve Australia's ability to defend herself. In short, Mr. Gorton said that "the main objective (of the budget) was to ensure a healthy and balanced growth of the economy so that the goals set in defense, in development, and in social welfare would be attained."

Placing further emphasis on defense, the Weekly Roundup paid particular attention to Mr. Allen Fairhill, Minister of Defense, who spoke before the Australian House of Representatives on May 2, 1968. Mr. Fairhill portrayed Southeast Asia as a very critical area and claimed that it was in Australia's own present and long-term interests that the nation take part in peace keeping efforts there. Mr. Fairhill called for Australian promotion of regional cooperation arrangements between the Indonesian and Malaysian Islands. On the question of Vietnam, Mr. Fairhill said that Australia should pledge its full support of United States efforts. He also made reference to President Johnson's partial bombing halt in March and stated that Australia would be prepared to support even further reductions in United States bombing of North Vietnam. When President Johnson halted all bombing of North Vietnam in November, Prime Minister Gorton is reported to have said that Australia "had consistently supported President Johnson in his refusal to accept advice" to stop the bombing. Now, however, since the cessation "held out hopes for peace," the Australian Government believed that there were good grounds for the President's decision and "we sincerely hope it will be proved right by future events."

In December, the Australians hailed the South Vietnamese Government's decision to attend the expanded peace talks in Paris as a necessary step toward peace in Vietnam. The Prime Minister said that he was pleased that South Vietnam decided to attend because "Australia had always regarded it as essential that the position of South Vietnam be safeguarded in moves to end the war in Vietnam."

Belgium

The Belgian Information Service, 50 Rockefeller Plaza, New York, New York, distributed occasional press releases and the monthly pamphlets Belgian News (800) and Memo from Belgium (800).

A substantial amount of the material published by the Belgian Information Service dealt with the cultural aspects of Belgium. Certain topics covered were the Belgian market of antique works of art, archaeological efforts by Belgian scientists, and the national library of Belgium. Many publications dealt with education, transportation, economics and social work in Belgium.

Other Information Service releases were concerned with describing the Belgian Government and electoral system. One press release entitled "The Composition of the Belgian Government" gave an historical view of the composition of the Belgian Cabinet and then proceeded with a detailed biography of the present cabinet members. Another informative release discussed the Belgian electoral system which is based on proportional representation and compulsory voting. There are three major political parties in Belgium: the Social Christian Party; the Belgian Socialist Party; and the Party for Liberty and Progress. The major partisan issues tend to revolve around religion and language differences, as Belgium is a bi-lingual country split between French and Dutch speaking peoples.

The Communist Party in Belgium is described as being not very important and split between pro-Peking and pro-Moscow forces.

Biafra

The Office of the Special Representative of the Republic of Biafra, 342 Madison Avenue, Suite 814, New York, distributed occasional press releases on behalf of the Republic of Biafra.

News from Biafra centered entirely on the Nigeria-Biafra war and on what Biafra termed the genocide that Nigeria was committing against Biafra. In early news releases the Biafran Office centered its attacks on Great Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union, for allegedly supporting Nigeria in her effort to put down the Biafran revolution. Great Britain bore the brunt of the attack with Biafra claiming that there was no doubt that British "mercenaries are serving in the Nigerian Army, Air Force and Navy; yet people have shut their eyes to these facts because they have sold their consciences to Lagos." Biafran spokesmen further warned that the day that British troops entered Biafran territorial waters would be "taken as the day that Britain declared war on Biafra." They claimed that it was a "strange marriage of convenience" with both Great Britain and the Soviet Union supporting Nigeria and supplying her with arms.

Biafra's attacks on the United States did not allege any direct involvement by this country, but were concerned with her refusal to take any positive action to aid Biafra. Biafra often asked the United States to persuade Britain to remove her supposed troops and supplies from Biafra. Dr. K. O. Mbadiwe, Biafran special envoy, urged that "The United States should use its moral weight to see that the bloodshed of the Nigeria-Biafra war stops." At the same time, he expressed his deep disappointment at the "attitude of complete indifference which America officially adopts."

In many news releases Biafran spokesmen cited the inability of the United Nations to take any action toward stopping the war, but claimed that Great Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union were at fault for this in that they joined together to hold the world body "in ransom." In March, Dr. Mbadiwe urged the United Nations to adopt a three point program to end the war. He called for the United Nations to:

- "(1) persuade Great Britain and Russia to withdraw all military supplies and personnel from Nigeria;
- (2) to use its good offices to get the two warring groups to stop the war and get to the conference table;
- (3) to get the International Red Cross to assert, with United Nations backing, its right to move medical supplies to Biafra."

In April of 1968, the Government of Biafra announced that it agreed to attend a peace conference proposed by Great Britain, but that it would not accept the proposed meeting place of London. It demanded that the conference be held in an African capital city and not in Great Britain since it felt that Britain was not really neutral, and that she had hidden intentions to retain control over Nigeria, originally one "of her own creations."

By the early summer months, the theme of Biafran propaganda changed from that of attacking foreign powers to expressing intense anxiety over the possible extinction of the Biafran Ibos. Biafra began to call upon voluntary pressure groups to force their governments to aid her in her fight against Nigeria whose "goal was not peace but destruction" and genocide. It became a war of starvation. Biafra claimed that Nigeria was poisoning what little food the Ibos did have and that Great Britain was clearly supporting Nigeria's political aims by demanding that all relief food and other aid be channeled through Nigerian inspection. In July, Biafran officials charged that Nigeria was committing a genocide by slowly eliminating the Ibo people and that "six thousand men, women and children die every day of hunger alone. By the end of August, one million Biafrans will have died of hunger."

Biafra presented a peace proposal based on three steps. First, it proposed an immediate cease fire with the cease fire line policed by an "International Force." Secondly, it called for an immediate removal of the "economic blockade mounted by Nigeria against Biafra." The third step was a call for a conference with Nigeria to discuss economic cooperation, compensation for war losses to both sides and the holding of a plebiscite to determine the true wishes of the people in the disputed area.

Brazil

The Brazilian Government Trade Bureau, 551 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York, distributed the monthly publication Brazilian Bulletin.

Information from Brazil focused primarily on the reported increase in stability of the Brazilian economy and political structure. A United States Embassy study was cited and was reported to have stated that today's Brazil has "more stable political and economic conditions" than ever before and more progress in the future is very likely.

President Costa e Silva declared that beside overcoming a recession in early 1967, Brazil had gone on to set new records in economic achievement in 1968, due to increased industrialization. Brazilian Bulletin often discussed the subject of industrialization and its primary stimulus, government incentives. As reported, "Incentives offered by the Government apply in four categories: investment in certain industrial sectors; agricultural investment; price stabilizing enterprises; and regional investment." What this industrialization and improvement meant to Brazil was a shift in the production possibilities curve of its economy. There was a substantial rise in the amount of manufactured goods produced while the volume of raw materials processed remained the same even though their prices fell on the world market.

There was an unexpected slight rise in import volume and fall in the amount of materials exported from Brazil, but by May, Brazil was experiencing a more favorable balance of trade with imports dropping by about 6%. The earlier balance was explained as being a result of increased importation of machinery and other capital needed in Brazil's industrialization effort and less European demand for Brazilian agricultural goods.

In July, Brazilian Bulletin discussed a speech by Finance Minister Delfim Neto in which he listed the five main goals of Brazil's economic program. These were:

- "1. Employment and production at full capacity
2. Stimulation of market growth
3. Keep the inflation rate going down
4. Even out regional income disparities
5. Keep the balance of payments healthy."

In the realm of international relations, news from Brazil revolved around the theme that there are great inequalities in the world with the less developed countries at the mercy of the more wealthy nations. Brazilian Foreign Minister Pinto is reported to have stated that "The gulf between developed and developing countries has never been so wide." Mr. Pinto complained that the "cooperation from the wealthy countries has fallen short of expectations." During another speech he suggested that ways be found so that trade would "cease to be a means of exploitation of the production effort of the less developed countries" and urged adoption of a system of guarantees for raw material prices in world trade.

Chile

The Embassy of Chile, Washington, D. C., distributed a fortnightly publication entitled News from Chile.

Agrarian reform, a new Plan for Constitutional Reform, and rebuilding the economy were common subjects of the Chilean Embassy's newsletters.

Rafael Moreno, Executive Vice President of the Chilean Agrarian Reform Corporation divided the reform process into six points. These points were:

1. Preservation of democracy in the nation
2. Increase in production
3. Create communities of farmers who work the same land they cultivated as farm laborers
4. Rapid process of agrarian reform in accordance with the capacity of the country
5. A system that recognizes the private property of the beneficiaries
6. To operate in a system of cooperatives.

The Plan for Constitutional Reform was reportedly drafted in order to "solve conflicts between the Executive and Legislative branches; to establish the obligation that every new Government submit in the first six months of its mandate a legal program Bill; and leaves to the Executive the initiative concerning all public expenditures." Chilean President Frei claimed that this reform was necessary in order to give the Executive sufficient power to solve the nation's economic problems. Other than these reforms, the Plan provided for the acceleration of the passage of laws and authorizes the President to dissolve the Congress once during his administration.

The objectives of the economic program in Chile were pronounced in November, 1968 by Minister of Finance Andres Zaldivar. This program was intended to: "break the low rhythm of productive growth; diminish the rate of inflation; provide a more equitable distribution of the fruits of development and property; organize and bring about the participation of the community in the various activities of society; and make more complete the national sovereignty by greater economic independence."

As the year 1968 came to an end, President Frei held a news conference that was reported upon by the Embassy of Chile. After stressing the economic and political reform which had taken place in Chile in 1968, the President went on to say that he considered that Chile's relations with her neighbor nations had improved and that he felt that 1969 would show increased trade and understanding between Chile and other nations. He concluded the conference by stating, "Our nation is going through a stage of vitality, with great creative impulse, and progress such as never has been attained before."

China (People's Republic of)

Publications from the People's Republic of China were distributed in the United States by two registrants: Henry Noyes (dba China Books and Periodicals), 2929 24th Street, San Francisco, California; and David Rosen (dba China Publications), 95 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York. Among the major periodicals distributed were the weekly news magazine Peking Review (1,770); the monthly magazines China Pictorial (775), China Reconstructs (775), Chinese Literature (237), and China's Medicine (70); and a monthly newsletter Letter from China (200). Also, printed in Chinese, were the daily newspaper Renmin Ribao (134) and Renmin Huabao, a monthly magazine (320). In addition, a number of books, pamphlets, posters and records were distributed to various recipients.

Three topics were recurrent in Communist Chinese publications in 1968. The thoughts of Mao Tse-tung, the war in Vietnam and the so-called United States imperialist threat were extensively discussed in nearly every Red Chinese publication.

The thoughts of Mao, his photographs, and his literary works dominated Communist Chinese literature. Mao's "cultural revolution," described as a mass movement of the proletariat to seize power from the capitalist bourgeoisie, was proclaimed a great success in 1968. Steady gains in agricultural production, industry and science were reported and the claim was made that all these achievements were made without incurring any debt. The most significant claim made by Red Chinese propagandists, however, was that this advancement and success was a result of "Mao's great inspiration." Letter from China described the cultural revolution, a product of Mao's thought, as the "time when the thought of Mao Tse-tung was established around the world on a scale no system of revolutionary ideas ever reached before."

In September, the cultural revolution was reported to be "in high gear." This was a result of the alleged success of Red China's agricultural communes, which "are the basic unit of rural China." It was stated in Letter from China that the communes "are a brilliant invention which greatly increases the country's efficiency in farming and all amenities of rural life and makes China unbeatable in any defensive war."

Finally, the cultural revolution entered the field of education. This new line in education is reportedly based on three tenets: All schools from the primary to college should be directly controlled and led by the working class; in all schools, political study is basic and Mao's works are emphasized; students will be drawn from the ranks of workers and peasants and upon graduation will continue to be workers and peasants.

A favorite target of Red Chinese propaganda in 1968 was the United States and the capitalist economic system. Chinese publications often expressed China's constant "fear of the threat of armed encirclement" of China, with the United States as the designer and leader of the plan. The United States was commonly characterized as the world's foremost imperialist aggressor with China being "the center of world revolution and of the struggle against U. S. imperialism." Letter from China claimed that "the world's peoples move inexorably towards confrontation with U. S. imperialism, towards a world anti-imperialist front." This same newsletter often exploited domestic problems in the United States saying that "U. S. imperialism faces an explosive situation at home as well as abroad." It contended that Americans can no longer feel secure for the "powerful struggle of the American Black people erupted last summer into violence" and characterized the disruption as a "rebellion that U. S. monopoly capitalism cannot resolve." In May, China Pictorial carried an eight page fold-out offering its support to what it termed the "Afro-American Struggle Against Violent Repression." Along with many photographs of rioting in American cities, it printed a statement by Mao Tse-tung who proclaimed, "On behalf of the Chinese people, I hereby express resolute support for the just struggle of the black people in the United States."

Another trouble spot for the United States, Vietnam, was also a much discussed topic in Chinese propaganda. Communist publications lent full support to North Vietnam and the National Liberation Front (NLF) and predicted the inevitable defeat of the United States with statements such as, "The splendid feats of the Front for National Liberation . . . show the people's forces growing from strength to strength and the forces of aggression approaching their doom." The Tet Offensive was described as a great victory "Unprecedented in military history." In November, Letter from China claimed that President Johnson's bombing halt in North Vietnam almost won the United States Presidential election for Vice President Humphrey, but "Like his earlier announcement of 'limited bombing' in parts of North Vietnam, this was a fake." The Vietnam war was viewed by the Communists as another prime example of the United States, a powerful nation, using its powers for destruction and aggression.

China (Republic of, Taiwan)

Material concerning the Republic of China is distributed in the United States by the Chinese Information Service which maintains offices at 100 West 32nd Street, New York, New York, and at 141 Battery Street, San Francisco, California. The principal publications were Free China Weekly, a newspaper (7,500); News from China, a daily news release (220); Background on China (214); Report on Mainland China (113) and intermittent feature sheets. In addition, the Information Service is engaged in the production and distribution of brief documentary films for television, distributed to approximately 100 television stations.

Again as in previous years, reports of events taking place in Mainland China dominated the Nationalist Chinese publications. Each edition of Free China Weekly carried a section called "What's happening on the mainland," which consistently reported any events on the mainland which would appear damaging to the regime of Mao Tse-tung. Typical topics in this section were: "Famine"; "Persecution"; "Murder"; "Subversion"; "Resistance"; and "Sabotage". This publication and Report on Mainland China also carried many articles predicting the overthrow of Mao's regime. In October it was reported that "All-out war against Mao Tse-tung and Chinese Communism was expected to erupt at any time and that the Taiwan Government would be prepared to provide support to the "700 million enslaved Chinese on the mainland." Several reasons for the pending overthrow were reported. The Nationalist Chinese claimed that Mao's ideas were contrary to Chinese tradition and had not been accepted. Mao had broken many promises in the past nineteen years and his power was supposedly just about exhausted. Besides this, the claim was made that life on the mainland has been made "atrocious" by the Communists and that "more than 8,000 bodies were found floating on the West River following a series of factional clashes and armed fights between the supporters and opponents of Mao Tse-tung in Kwangsi and Kwangtung provinces." In an address to the people of Taiwan, in October, President Chiang Kai-shek declared, "Our National Revolution continues, perseveres, and develops. It has brought Mao Tse-tung to realization that his rule of violence and despotism is doomed." The Chinese further claimed that the survival of the free world depends upon the end of Mao's Communist regime and the liberation of the Chinese mainland.

In international relations, the Nationalist Chinese placed primary emphasis on the upholding of the United Nations charter and the preservation of her legal status as United Nations representative of China. Another international goal of China, as expressed in Free China Weekly is the "enhancement of the free world's understanding of the ultimate success of our counterattack and collapse of the Chinese Communist regime."

Of special interest to the Nationalist Chinese in 1968 was their relationship with the United States. Taiwan frequently urged more cooperation between the two allies and declared that the Chinese Cultural Renaissance Movement, a movement designed to counter Mao's Cultural Revolution, is partially designed to "help the general public in the U. S. better understand the Republic of China and what the Chinese people on Taiwan are doing." The Republic of China often urged that she and the United States work together to oust Mao's regime and in November, after President Nixon's election, it was reported that the Taiwan Government hoped that the new President would adopt a firm position against Communism, although no dramatic changes in American foreign policy were expected. Information Service publications frequently expressed their firm support of the United States efforts in Vietnam but also voiced their doubts about the possible success of the Paris peace talks and the related bombing halt in North Vietnam.

In the realm of domestic affairs, the Chinese Cultural Renaissance Movement held the spotlight, and was termed the "most powerful and most important weapon in the cultural and ideological war against Communism." The Movement was initiated by President Chiang Kai-shek in 1965 to promote a new and modern China based on democratic principals. Of major importance to this program is the promotion of scientific, technical, and industrial development in the country. In November, the President expressed his satisfaction over the Movement's achievements over the past three years. In the February issue of Background on China, Prime Minister C. K. Yen was reported as saying that the goal of Taiwan's political and social construction was to "transform it into a land of democracy, freedom, prosperity and happiness and thus become better equipped to wage its political war to recover the mainland."

Cuba

Cuban publications were distributed by Robert Brauer, 761 Ninth Avenue North, St. Petersburg, Florida. Material disseminated in 1968 included Granma, a weekly newspaper with Spanish and English editions (18 each); Bohemia (Spanish), a weekly magazine (18); and Cuba (Spanish), a monthly magazine (18).

The year 1968 was known in Cuba as the "Year of the Heroic Guerrilla." Fidel Castro's revolution and his fight against "counterrevolutionaries," the war in Vietnam and the activities of other South American revolutionaries such as Che Guevara were frequent topics in the Cuban publications.

In September, the newspaper Granma carried the text of one of Castro's speeches in which he praised the success of his revolution and resulting regime, and claimed that "Our country is becoming a society of workers, manual or brain workers, revolutionary students and combatants." The Cuban leader continued, "We must point out that today the revolution can feel satisfied with the great efforts that have been made in the province of Havana in productive work as well as in the ideological field."

Castro saw counterrevolutionary activities as a serious threat to the success of his revolution. He called the counterrevolutionaries products of imperialism and often linked their activities to the United States and especially to the Central Intelligence Agency. He vowed that "before the Revolution ceases to be, not one single counterrevolutionary will remain with his head on his shoulders in this country."

In July, Castro dedicated the 15th anniversary of his revolution to the Bolivian revolutionary, Che Guevara. Castro called him "the strongest defender of man's conscience as an instrument of development in the Revolution" Granma reported that Che Guevara's campaign in Bolivia had not ended with his death. The newspaper carried a speech by Inti Peredo, a top official in Guevara's guerrilla organization who proclaimed that "Guerrilla warfare in Bolivia is not dead. It has just begun." When in July, the diary of Che Guevara was first distributed, Granma reported that the Cuban people gave the book a warm reception, calling it "a valued gift to the people."

Keeping in line with its support of the "Heroic Guerrilla," Cuban propaganda frequently praised the Vietnamese guerrilla and the North Vietnamese people in the battle against what Granma termed the "Yankee genocide in Vietnam." An editorial pronounced that "our Party and our Government congratulate the Vietnamese people and their vanguard organizations for the victories obtained in the revolutionary struggle, and we once more reiterate . . . unconditional solidarity of the Cuban Revolution with the heroic struggle of the people of Vietnam." In November, Granma reported on the Second Symposium Against Yankee Genocide in Vietnam which was held in Cuba. It quoted Melba Hernandez, president of the Symposium Organizing Committee, as saying that the United States "began by killing in order to win and now they are bent on killing and destroying simply because they cannot win" The general declaration of this Committee was that "Yankee imperialism employs its military power to destroy an entire people."

When discussing the invasion of Czechoslovakia by the Warsaw Pact nations, Cuba staunchly supported the invasion. Fidel Castro is reported to have stated in an address concerning these events that Czechoslovakia was moving toward a counter-revolutionary situation, toward the United States and toward capitalism, and that the invasion was necessary to prevent this from taking place.

Cuban publications also displayed sympathy for the black militant movement in the United States. It was reported that George Mason Murray, Minister of Education of the Black Panther Party, said while in Havana that it was the Cuban Revolution and Che Guevara that inspired the black movement in the United States. Granma professed that "It is clear that the U. S. blackman's struggle today is for liberty, because blacks constitute a colonized people within the imperialist society."

There is little reference in Cuban publications to the many hijackings of United States planes to Cuba. These incidents were usually only dealt with by a brief statement setting forth the name of the airline, the plane's destination and the number of people aboard. There was very little discussion of the hijackers themselves or of what took place while the aircraft remained in Cuba.

Ghana

The Ghana Information Services, 565 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York, disseminated Ghana Today, a biweekly news magazine (2,000) and Ghana Review, an occasional magazine.

Announcements emanating from Ghana early in the year were very optimistic and predicted greater stability and growth for the country which had recently overthrown its ruler Kwame Nkrumah. One frequent prediction was the nation's return to civilian rule which was reported to be the "supreme and central objective" of the National Liberation Council (NLC), the ruling body of Ghana. General Ankrah, head of the NLC also announced that the country was making great progress towards revitalizing the economy and "promoting good neighborliness towards friendly people who live around us."

The Information Services were much concerned with the nation's development since the ousting of Nkrumah. On the second anniversary of the revolution, in February, one entire issue of Ghana Today was devoted to describing Ghana's achievements under the two year old National Liberation Council. The Information Services claimed that "within these two years, far-reaching decisions have had to be taken in an attempt to correct the injustices of the past and effect the long-awaited changes in the economic, social and political life of this country." It contrasted the hard times under the Nkrumah regime to the "comparative freedom and justice which are once again evident in Ghanaian society." In support of this statement the Information Services reported that the NLC had restored personal rights and that democratic rule is now being realized in Ghana under its new constitution.

Of special interest to the Ghanians is their new Co-operative Movement in agricultural production. This plan which Ghana Today calls the "fourth sector of the national economy" is reported to have taken a leading role in the economic reconstruction of the country by improving living standards and increasing the agricultural productivity of Ghana. The Information Services declared that the NLC "is doing its best to promote an efficient and truly co-operative movement whose activities will be purely economic and will not be allowed to get itself involved in politics."

Information Services publications contained much praise for the NLC and its efforts to develop a democratic government based on a parliamentary system. Of primary importance to the Ghanians was the establishment of the Constitutional Commission and the Manpower Board. The Commission was to draft a constitution based on individual rights and a free electoral system, while the Manpower Board was established to develop the educational and occupational training systems at all levels in the country, in order to prepare the people for popular government. Other reported governmental achievements were: the reorganization of the Public Service; the establishment of the Income Commission; and the creation of a public library system, the Defense Council and the Press Council. Finally, in June, the NLC set September 30, 1969 as the date that civilian government would be installed in Ghana.

In the realm of international relations, the Information Services praised its nation's efforts to rebuild its relations with all nations of the world under the banner of "non-alignment and balanced neutrality." To substantiate its claim of better relations, Ghana cited its participation in the Organization for African Unity, its acceptance of a West African Economic Community, and trips by General Ankrah to Canada, the United States and Great Britain. The main objective of Ghanaian foreign policy was reported to be the promotion of unity and understanding in Africa, and Ghana felt that the best vehicle for this move would be closer economic ties between the African countries.

In regard to the racial question which seemed to be plaguing many of her neighbors, Ghana stated that she opposes "racialism in all its forms" and strives to establish equal rights for all men. The Information Services continued "we have denounced in no uncertain terms, South Africa's apartheid policy (and) we have every reason to congratulate ourselves that racial discrimination does not exist" in Ghana.

Great Britain

Information on Great Britain was filed by two registrants in 1968. The British Information Services, 835 Third Avenue, New York, New York, distributed a wide variety of material. Its regular publications were: Today's British Papers, a daily news sheet (601); British Record, a bimonthly political and economic news sheet (7,938); and several information papers and pamphlets of varying circulation. The British-American Chamber of Commerce, 655 Madison Avenue, New York, New York, distributed British-American Trade News, a biannual magazine (9,000) and several news sheets and letters to public officials.

A great many articles in British Information Services publications in 1968 concerned Great Britain's struggling economy. In January, it was reported by the British Record that only eight weeks after the British Government had devalued the pound, it was planning further economic measures to build a balance of payments surplus by shifting British economic resources into the export industry. The newsletter declared that in the wake of devaluation the independent and authoritative National Institute of Economic and Social Research forecasted an eventual balance of payments surplus of over $2 billion.

The first economic proposal to be announced was a cut in public expenditure by $720 million in 1968-1969 and almost $1 billion in 1969-1970, to make this money available to the export industry. The next element of this plan "to make devaluation work," the nation's budget, was presented in March and was described as a "tough budget." It called for a $2.2 billion increase in taxes. The British Government believed that these measures to restrict consumption were harsh, but that they paid off. In November, Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Roy Jenkins, reported that the British balance of payments deficit had been reduced from $1.2 billion to $300 million and foreign confidence in sterling had been substantially restored. Mr. Jenkins termed the trend a "growing buoyancy" in the economy.

In foreign affairs British publications portrayed the nation as being most concerned with defense, the Commonwealth of Nations, and her other former colonies. In November, the British Record discussed a speech by Mr. Denis Healey, British Defense Minister, who outlined the Government's reaction to the Czechoslovak crisis in relation to Britain's defense. Mr. Healey offered the opinion that the Czech incident proved beyond doubt the need for NATO and necessitated the reevaluation of that organization's ability to preserve the security and freedom of the Western nations. Mr. Healey said that "Britain's security depends above all on peace in Europe" and that peace in Europe depends on a strong NATO.

In 1968 the British Government implied that it was a mistake for the nation to attempt to exercise unlimited power in every part of the world. This type of activity was just too much of a strain on British resources. In the words of Mr. Michael Stewart, Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, "The way in which Britain must look after her interests and fulfill her duty to mankind must be by active participation in the U. N., the Commonwealth of Nations and NATO." In line with this policy, it was announced in January that British forces would be withdrawn from Malaysia and Singapore by the end of 1971 and in September, that the former colony of Swaziland had become independent.

Of particular interest to Britain in the realm of foreign affairs in 1968 was her relations with the secessionist colony of Rhodesia. In October, the Information Services published "Rhodesia White Paper" which set forth six principles which the British Government regarded as minimum requirements upon which it would base a settlement and grant Rhodesia its independence. These are as follows:

1. Unimpeded progress toward majority rule
2. Guarantees against retrogressive amendments of the Constitution
3. Immediate improvement of the political status of the African population

4. Progress toward ending racial discrimination
5. Proof that any basis proposed for independence was acceptable to all the people of Rhodesia
6. No oppression of the majority by the minority or of the minority by the majority.

India

The Information Service of the Embassy of India, National Press Building, 529 14th Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., disseminates two regular publications, India News, a weekly newspaper and Foreign Affairs Record, a monthly magazine. It also distributes an occasional news sheet, Indiagram, and some press releases.

Overcoming political, economic and social instability was of prime importance to India in 1968. India News reported upon the Indian Prime Minister's speech to Parliament when she "appealed to all political parties to evolve a 'common denominator of approach and understanding' on issues of major national importance and to dedicate themselves to building a firm democratic base in the country." Mrs. Gandhi stated that the government was willing to work with all political interests in solving the major national problems such as food shortages, economic difficulties and the issue of the Indian official language. The Prime Minister said that India's problems could be overcome through cooperative effort within the framework of planned economic development. In her own words, "We are pursuing a middle path (in economic theory). No matter what are the difficulties in agriculture, industry, public sector or in the private sector, we have to overcome them intelligently and within the broad framework of planned economic development." She saw progress through cooperation and planning possible because of her "unlimited faith" in the goodness and decency of the Indian people.

Of special interest to the Indians was the nation's relations with her neighbor, Pakistan. In April, the Prime Minister is reported to have stated that India had great hopes of improving her relations with Pakistan. She said that past bitterness between the two countries should be forgotten. The Prime Minister expressed her belief that both had many problems in common and that they should work cooperatively to solve them. Mrs. Gandhi said that India "accepts Pakistan as an independent sovereign state" and that the two nations should try to appreciate rather than exploit each other's problems. Relations between India and Pakistan did not improve much in 1968, however, and India constantly charged in her publications that "despite all provocations . . . India had always endeavored to reach peaceful settlement of all our differences." She claimed that this was unilateral action on India's part.

India's relations with Red China were also quite strained in 1968. Indian publications frequently expressed the fear that their borders were in danger of Chinese incursions, and in June, it was reported by India News that the Indian Government had charged the Communist Chinese with promoting an "insidious propaganda offensive" aimed at inciting subversive elements in North-Eastern India to overthrow the Indian Government. Defense Minister Swaran Singh claimed that India had consistently attempted to settle disputes with Red China by peaceful means, but that "China continues hostilities." In August, Nawab Ali Yavar, Indian Ambassador to the United States, called relations between the United States and India "very good." He cited certain differences between the two countries but characterized them as natural and unimportant. Referring to recent talks between his Government and the United States, the Ambassador had only praise, calling the discussions "a very welcome breakthrough in our relations."

Indonesia

The Embassy of Indonesia, 2020 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., distributed the biweekly news release Indonesian News and Views, and a bimonthly magazine called Focus on Indonesia.

Publications from Indonesia placed their primary attention upon the country's efforts to revitalize her economy. In January, General Soeharto, Acting President of the Republic, voiced his determination "to practice the rule of law and the law of economics as the essential elements in the course of development of the national economy."

In February, the Government listed a number of fields of national activities to serve as the major vehicles for progress toward economic stability. Several of the more important areas of concern were:

1. food production, supply, and distribution
2. clothing
3. preparations for the start of a five-year National Development Plan
4. promotion of foreign trade and development
5. rural development
6. re-enforcement of law and order.

On March 27, 1968, General Soeharto was appointed President of the Republic of Indonesia. The Provisional People's Assembly declared this act necessary because the establishment of economic and political stability in the country demanded the powers of a full president.

General Soeharto, on June 6, announced the formation of a new cabinet. He referred to it as the "Development Cabinet" and its main tasks were as follows:

1. to create political and economic stabilization
2. to draft and implement the five-year development plan
3. to hold general elections
4. to restore order and security.

It was expressed that if Indonesia became economically and politically stable, the nation could become the "main anchor for peace and security in Southeast Asia." This claim was used by the Indonesians as a rationale for improving their relations with the United States and for seeking aid from the American Government.

Israel

Four registrants distributed information in 1968 on behalf of Israel. The Jewish Agency-American Section, 515 Park Avenue, New York, New York, distributed The Israel Digest, a biweekly news magazine (8,000); Israel Among the Nations, a wall newspaper for classroom use; press releases (average 125); and other miscellaneous publications. The Israel Information Services, 11 East 70th Street, New York, New York, distributed News from Israel, a biweekly newsletter (6,000); press releases (average 1,500); and occasional pamphlets (average 6,700). The Services also distributed radio broadcasts entitled: Vistas of Israel (weekly); Israel Press Review (weekly); Israel Almanac (bimonthly); and Passover in Israel.

Israel Communications, Inc., 477 Madison Avenue, New York, New York and Ruder & Finn, Inc., 130 East 59th Street, New York, New York, distributed occasional press releases of a cultural and commercial nature.

The aftermath of the June, 1967 war with the Arab nations, continuing Arab terrorist attacks in Israel, and Israel's plans for peace were themes dominating Israeli publications in 1968.

In October, The Israel Digest reported 1968 to be one of Israel's best years on record, in terms of economic performance. Budget Chief Moshe Zandberg predicted that "Output will increase this year by 13 per cent, investments by 25 per cent, exports by 18 per cent . . . and prices by only 2.5 per cent." Mr. Zandberg called the economy successfully balanced in that an abundance of imports induced rapid economic growth, while at the same time low production costs buoyed exports.

Israel viewed its "reunification of Jerusalem" after the June war as one of its major achievements of 1968. The Government's first steps were to remove all physical barriers between the Israeli and former Arab sectors of the city, and they then made many attempts at modernization in the Holy City. In January, The Israel Digest reported vast improvements in the city's roads, sanitation and water supply. The article continued its praise of the reunification program by stressing that Arab-Jewish relations were improving and the Arab standard of living was on the rise.

Throughout the year, Israeli publications reported many incidents involving Arab terrorists. When a terrorist band struck the Israeli capital, Tel Aviv, Mayor Mordechai Namir called for calm in the city and an end to violence which erupted following a series of bomb explosions. Israeli police took many of the city's Arab residents into protective custody as the search for the Arab terrorists, described as "young hotheads," took place. This action was reportedly taken in order to preserve the generally "good relations between (Tel Aviv's) Jewish and Arab residents."

Many violations of the June, 1967 cease-fire agreement and incursions into its territory, especially by the Jordanians, were also frequently reported by Israel. Referring to a Jordanian artillery attack in February, Israeli Premier Levi Eshkol declared, "We shall not acquiesce in a situation in which the Jordanian forces can open fire whenever they feel so inclined." He continued to emphasize that "we preferred restraint (to armed rebuttal) in the hope that wisdom would prevail (but) I suggest that the rulers of Jordan carefully consider their ways."

"We shall regard the readiness of the Arab Governments to sit down with us face to face as a test of their actual desire to make peace," so declared Israel's Foreign Minister, Abba Eban in February, as reported by The Israel Digest. Mr. Eban stressed that Israel wished to see an end to war and hostility with the Arabs, and that this end could only be accomplished by direct talks between the Arabs and Israelis, held under United Nations auspices.

In May, Mr. Israel Galili, Israel's Minister in charge of Information, reaffirmed the nation's stand for direct talks when he announced that the pre-June, 1967 national borders in the Middle East no longer existed, that Israel was not about to withdraw from the present cease-fire lines and that face-to-face Arab-Israeli talks were necessary to re-establish and secure the borders.

On October 8, Mr. Abba Eban presented Israel's nine-point peace plan to the United Nations which set forth Israel's ideas on just what should be negotiated in the direct talks. These points are here summarized:

1. The cease-fire must be followed by a duly negotiated, just and lasting peace.
2. The present cease-fire lines are to be replaced by permanent boundaries.
3. An Arab-Israel pledge of mutual non-aggression.
4. Guaranteed freedom of movement in the area including free port facilities for Jordan on Israel's Mediterranean Coast.
5. Equality of navigation rights.
6. A "Mid-East conference" to chart a five-year plan to solve the refugee problem.
7. A status for Jerusalem should be worked out with regard to the universal nature of the Holy Places, "which should come under the responsibility of those who hold them in reverence."
8. Arab States should recognize the sovereignty, integrity and right to national existence of Israel, as expressed in the November 22 United Nations resolution.
9. Regional cooperation and common approach to regional means and resources.

When this plan, as well as the direct talks were spurned by the Arab leaders, Premier Levi Eshkol insisted that despite the Arabs' refusal to negotiate, "Israel will persist in her efforts for coexistence with the Arabs," and will continue to do her utmost to prove her desire for improved relations.

In the realm of foreign relations with non-Arab nations, relations with the United States were of prime concern to Israel. In February, News from Israel carried a story on Premier Eshkol's visit to the United States. This visit reportedly reaffirmed "the traditionally close, friendly and cooperative ties which link the people of Israel and the U. S."

In December, on his return to Israel from New York, Defense Minister Moshe Dayan declared that he found in the United States no indication of any change in American policy toward Israel. Mr. Dayan made these remarks as a rebuttal to Mr. William Scranton the Middle East envoy of the then, President-elect Nixon. Mr. Dayan criticized Mr. Scranton for implying that any improvement in relations between the United States and the Arabs would be at Israel's expense.

Japan

Several registrants representing Japanese trade interests distributed press releases, pamphlets and letters to members of Congress and other government officials. These registrants were: Japan Trade Center, 393 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York; United States-Japan Trade Council, 1000 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C.; Japan Steel Information Center, 230 Park Avenue, New York, New York and 1000 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C.; The Public Relations Board, 75 East Wacker Drive, Chicago, Illinois; Daniels & Houlihan, 1819 H Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.; Ruder & Finn International, Inc., 130 East 59th Street, New York, New York; and Donald Lerch & Co., Inc., 1522 K Street, N. W., Washington, D. C.

Japan's economy, her trade relations with the United States, and her concern with United States tariffs and import restrictions were of deep concern to the Japanese in 1968.

Japan: Asia's Economic Miracle, a pamphlet distributed by the United States-Japan Trade Council, discussed three important reasons for what it termed the "dramatic rebirth" of Japan's economy. It cited:

- "1. Japan's prewar foundation of economic strength and industrial capacity.
2. The Japanese ancient traditions of untiring energy, cooperation, and competitive skill.
3. Extensive investment of U. S. economic and military assistance."

Most Japanese publications emphasized the third point, United States assistance, as being the most important factor in Japan's economic modernization. The Japan Trade Center calling the two allies "Pacific Partners" stated that American technology, management skills and capital are behind Japan's modernization. The Trade Center continued to say that these "relations provide a fine example of the international division of labor, as well as a firm foundation for peace and friendship."

The Japanese saw a threat to their United States trade relations, however, and as stated by Raymond Nathan, Vice President of Ruder & Finn, Inc., "The threat of new trade barriers of whatever nature brings an automatic threat from our (the United States) trading partners for reciprocal restrictions." He called for the United States to avoid hampering trade by working for freer trade among nations.

Constantly aware of this threat, Japanese trade organizations frequently lobbied in Congress against proposed tariffs and other trade restrictions in the United States. Nelson A. Stitt, Director of the United States-Japan Trade Council, presented one such plea to the House Ways and Means Committee. Mr. Stitt stressed that bills to restrict trade not only would injure Japan and other nations but would "also pose a serious danger to the health of the United States economy." He claimed that a United States retreat into protectionism would result in political consequences quite damaging to Japanese-American relations and that any restrictive measures introduced by the United States would prompt retaliation by Japan. Mr. Stitt concluded by saying that assistance to less developed countries can be best achieved by "opening the markets of industrialized nations on a non-discriminatory basis" and that "Regional trade blocks are a step in the wrong direction away from the multilateral reduction of tariffs and trade barriers." In short, Mr. Stitt argued against import quotas, import surcharges, and other forms of trade restrictions. He called for the expansion of free trade and the maintenance of multilateral trade principles. Similar pleas were made on behalf of the Japanese textile, lumber and steel industries.

North Vietnam

On behalf of North Vietnam, Henry Noyes (dba China Books and Periodicals), 2929 24th Street, San Francisco, California, disseminated Vietnam Illustrated, a monthly magazine (350); Vietnam Courier, a weekly newspaper (375); and several books and pamphlets.

North Vietnamese propaganda dealt entirely with the war in Vietnam and the so-called "U. S. aggressor and puppet troops." The North Vietnamese position can be easily summarized by quoting the Premier, Pham Van Dong when he said, "Decidedly there is no question of paying any ransom to the robbers! Peace will immediately return if the U. S. Government ends the war of aggression against our country, and withdraws U. S. and satellite troops from South Viet Nam." The Communists boasted that they were succeeding in driving out the United States forces. In articles with titles such as "U. S. Failure is Obvious" and "All U. S. Crack Units Badly Mauled," the Communist propagandists frequently listed alleged United States war losses. In November, they listed 3,243 U. S. aircraft downed and 143 U. S. ships sunk or damaged.

The North Vietnamese accredited the "United States failure" to the courage of the People's Liberation Armed Forces (P.L.A.F. or Vietcong) and its political arm the National Front for Liberation (NLF) which they claimed are the true representatives of the South Vietnamese people. In the North, the reported success of the North Vietnamese armed forces and the people's militia in shooting down United States planes was cited as "living proof of the complete bankruptcy of the U. S. imperialism's 'air superiority'."

Besides extolling the success of the armed forces, Communist publications also paid tribute to the Vietnamese civilians whom they viewed as just as important to the war effort as were the soldiers. The war was referred to as the "people's war" in which the "entire people fight the enemy." The peasant's efforts in agriculture and industrial production, their desire to help repair war damaged harbors and roads, and their overall support of the armed forces were praised by the North Vietnamese.

The Communists also gave extensive coverage to the unrest in the United States over the war in Vietnam. With titles such as "The Ground is Swelling Under the White House," North Vietnamese publications exploited draft resistance, peace demonstrations, and rioting in the United States, saying that these occurrences all indicated the American people's discontent with the Government's war policy.

Pakistan

The Embassy of Pakistan distributes Pakistan Affairs, a biweekly news bulletin, Interim Report Series, a monthly report on economic developments, and occasional pamphlets.

The year 1968 marked the end of what Pakistan termed its "Development Decade." In April, the Embassy of Pakistan announced that since 1958 Pakistan had been the scene of numerous reforms. It reported reforms in the areas of agriculture, education, the Constitution, law, and private foreign investment policy. The high priority item in Pakistan's reform program was reported to be agriculture. Significant investments were made to provide improved irrigation and the further use of fertilizers. The Embassy boasted that Pakistan is one of the few nations in the world which has achieved the goal of a five per cent annual increase in national income which was set by the United Nations' own Development Decade 1960-1970.

Despite this economic advancement, President Mohammad Ayub Khan was plagued with domestic unrest and civil disobedience. In November, rioting, led by Pakistanis who opposed the President's policies, broke out in the country. Ayub Khan answered this disruption by saying, "Political parties are free to present their programs to the people. There is only one condition: these political differences should not assume the shape of lawlessness, violence, force and terrorism which are unconstitutional, illegal and undemocratic methods." The President made five additional points in relation to these disturbances:

1. Immediate action is being taken to redress many legitimate grievances.
2. Those who call for change should spell out the particulars of some alternative program.
3. The present Government was established by the will of the people and this legitimate existence will be defended.
4. Internal strife provides "breeding grounds" for foreign conspiracies.
5. The elections are approaching and this will offer the opposition the proper opportunity to work for change.

On the international scene, Pakistan's relations with India were of primary importance. President Ayub Khan said in September, "We want to settle all our disputes with India in a peaceful manner. This has also been our policy in regard to the dispute about Jammu and Kashmir." Pakistan persisted in her claim that these areas are not integral parts of India and that they deserve the right of self-determination as to their political future. Pakistan held that these disputes must be solved before she could accept the so-called no-war pact presented to her by India.

The Embassy reported relations with the United States to be friendly and cooperative, based on mutual recognition of each other's interests.

Rhodesia

The Ian Smith Government of Rhodesia maintains the Rhodesian Information Office at 2852 McGill Terrace, N. W., Washington, D. C. Its publications consist of Rhodesian Commentary, a biweekly publication (9,000); Rhodesian Viewpoint, a frequent two page sheet of general commentary (3,000); Press Comment on Rhodesia, periodic reprints from the American Press concerning Rhodesia; and several informational pamphlets. The Information Office also makes available a number of films for interested parties.

Air Rhodesia, 535 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York, distributed several maps and pamphlets promoting travel to Rhodesia and offering advice to prospective travellers.

"We Rhodesians believe that there is both a place and a future for all Rhodesians -- both black and white. Any other suggestion is unacceptable to us, as is anything other than genuine independence." This portion of a speech made by Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith in November summarizes the Rhodesian position in her running feud with Great Britain. Rhodesian independence, Great Britain's opposition to it, and the resulting "war of economic sanctions" were topics permeating Rhodesian Information Office publications in 1968.

Early in the year the Prime Minister reported to his people that their nation was every day gaining strength, wealth and experience. He stressed that Rhodesia had earned the respect of many nations of the world and was proving her ability to exist as an independent nation. Great Britain, who had different ideas about Rhodesia's ability to sustain herself, and who had been the sponsor of the United Nations resolution calling for stringent economic sanctions against Rhodesia, came under frequent attack from the Information Office. The sanctions involved a total embargo on all trade between Rhodesia and other nations and Rhodesian Viewpoint termed this action the "United Nations assault on Rhodesia." Despite these sanctions Rhodesia made its claim that it was still economically sound. Rhodesian Viewpoint quoted The Illustrated London News as saying, "Rhodesia had come through. Three years of sanctions have proved that she can survive."

In November, the Information Office printed the text of Prime Minister Smith's address to the nation concerning his Government's negotiations with Great Britain over a Rhodesian independence settlement. Mr. Smith stressed that the negotiations had met one major road block and had thus ended with little success. Smith declared that the British proposal for a "safeguard" by which the British Government could provide guarantees against retrogressive amendments to Rhodesia's independence constitution was completely unacceptable to his Government. Of this safeguard, which in effect provides the British with the power of veto over certain Rhodesian Parliament law making decisions, Mr. Smith said the British Government wishes "to assume additional powers which are a derogation from the sovereignty of our Rhodesian Parliament. It is quite clear in everybody's mind that what they are trying to do is to accede to our independence with the one hand, while at the same time trying to take it away with the other."

In July, the Information Office reported Rhodesia's relations with the United States becoming strained because of the signing of the United States Executive Order providing for the application of tighter sanctions against Rhodesia in accordance with the United Nations Security Council resolution of May 29. Later, in October, the Wheeling News Register (Wheeling, West Virginia) was quoted as saying, "It is an absurd situation. We are demanding sanctions against a nation which is at peace with us. We have no business sticking our nose into the Rhodesian matter . . . What is more shocking is the fact that the sanctions were invoked by the President without consultation with Congress."

South Africa

The Information Service of South Africa, 655 Madison Avenue, New York, New York, distributes several publications dealing with that country. Included are News from South Africa, a weekly sheet of general news items (8,300); South African Digest, a weekly news magazine (18); South African Scope, a monthly magazine of general information (25,000); South African Panorama, a monthly pictorial magazine (4,289); and a number of pamphlets distributed intermittently.

"Has the time not come for a change in attitude toward South Africa?" questioned the South African Ambassador to the United States, Mr. H. L. T. Taswell, in a speech published in South African Scope in December. Mr. Taswell was expressing South Africa's feeling that for too many years she had been the "international whipping boy" at the United Nations because many have condemned her racial policy of apartheid. Mr. Taswell made the charge that South Africa's strongest critics were deeply involved themselves with racial strife while his nation is "progressing, prospering and thriving in tranquility." "Our approach," he continued, "recognizes that people wish to run their own affairs with a form of government which fits in with their own customs and way of doing things." In these words Mr. Taswell stated South Africa's rationalization for its policy of apartheid, or separate development of the races. This policy was reportedly designed so that in those areas in which the interests of a particular national group are predominant, the interests would remain dominant in all respects. This was a frequent topic in South African publications in 1968.

The Information Service reported that the South African economy had grown successfully in 1968. Imports and exports were high, reflecting an active trading economy which "generated about 20 per cent of the (African) geographic income and (accounted) for about 40 per cent of its industrial production." In speaking of the economy, Ambassador Taswell again brought the racial question into play and defended South Africa by claiming that "All sections of our community benefit from our prosperity." After citing several statistics to emphasize the economic power of the South African black people, he continued, "one of our biggest problems is posed by the thousands of others who cross our borders illegally in order to seek the (economic) benefit we have to offer." South African Digest reported a slight rise in employment in 1968 with a steady upward trend in wages and salaries in manufacturing and a somewhat smaller rise in the mining and construction industries.

Information Service publications frequently stressed that South Africa was successfully trying to better its diplomatic relations with "neighbouring Black states," with no regard to the South African policy of separate development. She allegedly had developed a special knowledge of African conditions and was anxious to use this knowledge to contribute to Africa generally. In 1968, South Africa's relations with the United States were reported "friendly and well disposed despite the insults (South Africans) have received from some people in senior positions" in the United States.

Spain

The Information Department of the Embassy of Spain, 785 National Press Building, Washington, D. C., distributed the monthly publication Spanish Newsletter.

Tourism, a frequent topic of the Spanish Newsletter, was in January reported to be "the most important export industry in Spain." Manuel Fraga Iribarne, Spanish Minister of Information and Tourism, claimed that the devaluation of the Spanish peseta and the continuance of political tensions in the eastern Mediterranean "are bound to shift large numbers of tourists toward Spain."

Another area of economic development of interest to the Spanish Newsletter was Spain's rising gross national product. The growth in constant-value pesetas of the gross national product during the last four years was reported to be 27.7 per cent. During the same period, gross formation of capital in Spain rose by 36.4 per cent. Similar increases were also reported in health and sanitary facilities and in the attendance at educational centers. Spain also registered a more favorable balance of trade with exports increasing 88.2 per cent while imports increased at a slower rate of 77.9 per cent.

In the international sphere, the Spanish publications dealt primarily with the Gibraltar question and Spain's dispute with the British Government over whether or not Spain should regain the territory of Gibraltar from Great Britain who holds "the Rock" under political control. In the words of Spain's Minister of Foreign Affairs, Fernando M. Costiella, "We do not wish to absorb a people, nor make Spaniards of the Gibraltarians, against their wishes. We desire only to recover the territory of Spain on which the inhabitants of Gibraltar may live, in peace and freedom. . . ." The Spaniards further accused the British Government of "encouraging the people of Gibraltar to defend at the cost of their legitimate interests, the colonial and military interests of Great Britain."

Spanish reports of the nation's United Nations activities displayed the influence the Gibraltar question had on the Spanish foreign policy. Spain supported the United Nations resolution calling for Spain and Great Britain to negotiate procedures in safeguarding the "interests of the Gibraltarians once the territorial integrity of Spain is restored." When Great Britain failed to comply with this resolution, Spain felt bound to abstain from voting on the United Nations nuclear non-proliferation proposal of which Great Britain was a co-sponsor.

In March, the Spanish Government announced that not wishing to delay the decolonization process, it had proposed that Equatorial Guinea, a Spanish colony, would receive her independence as soon as possible. Later, in August, the Government proclaimed that the Constitution of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea had been passed by referendum and thus legalized. October 12, 1968 was announced as the day that independence would become effective for the new nation.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Printed material emanating from the Soviet Union in 1968 was disseminated by four organizations: Four Continent Book Corporation, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York; Imported Publications and Products, 1 Union Square, New York, New York; Cross World Books and Periodicals, 333 South Wacker Drive, Chicago, Illinois; and Eastern News Distributors, Inc., 155 West 15th Street, New York, New York. This material consisted of books, journals, periodicals, reviews, newspapers, pamphlets, etc. Included within this material are New Times, a weekly news journal (390); International Affairs, a monthly journal (345); Soviet Union (155), Soviet Woman (40) and Culture and Life (100), monthly pictorial magazines; Sputnik, a monthly digest (15,000); Soviet Military Review, a monthly magazine; and Moscow News, a weekly newspaper (9,430).

New Times declared 1968 to be a year of achievement for the Soviet Union in all areas of life. Throughout the year the Soviet press carried many reports on the progress made in building Communism and its resulting achievements. The country was characterized as being richer for these accomplishments as it pursued "a path illuminated by Lenin's ideas."

The Soviets hailed their achievements in industry, science, technology and agriculture as strong evidence of the "vast potential inherent in socialism." They said that before the October Revolution in 1917 Russia had lagged far behind the United States in development but today the country is "competing on an equal footing" with the United States. This rapid growth was seen as proof of Communism's great potential. The year 1968 marked the end of the third year of the Soviet Union's current five-year development plan and it was reported that the third year goals had been attained ahead of time, in early November. According to a New Times editorial in December, Russian national income was up by 7.2 per cent, industrial output had increased by 8.3 per cent and "Despite the unfavorable weather conditions in some areas, the grain harvest was about 18 million tons more than in 1967."

Soviet foreign policy was reportedly based on the people's desire for peace throughout the world. A New Times editorial exclaimed, "throughout the years the Soviet Union has consistently pursued a Leninist foreign policy of peace, a policy fully endorsed by the Soviet people." The publication further stressed in a later edition that the Soviet people's "thoughts are of peace, of the progress and triumph of Communism, of happiness and well-being not only for themselves and their country but for all the peoples of the world." This policy of peace is, according to the Communists, "based on recognition of and respect for the equality and sovereignty of all peoples, . . . It is a policy aimed at ruling out wars, a policy standing on guard for peace and the security of the peoples." In the Soviet point of view, however, 1968 was not a very encouraging year, as the prospects for peace were few, and the "seats of war" many. The Soviets cited three such "seats." "In Asia such a seat is Vietnam, where the U. S. war is still going on. In Europe it is the aggressive NATO bloc, spearheaded by West Germany. In the Middle East it is the Israeli aggression against the Arab countries, . . ." The Russians saw the elimination of these hotbeds as a prerequisite to peace as proposed by their peace policy.

The Soviets often voiced their opinion that there are other prerequisites to peace. Nuclear disarmament, the dismantling of foreign military bases, and acceptance of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty were all deemed necessary. Of the treaty it was said "it will undoubtedly play an important part in the efforts of the nations to ensure lasting peace."

Concerning the Soviet Union's actions in Czechoslovakia, for which it received severe criticism around the world, the Soviets claimed that they had acted in the best interest of the Czechoslovak people. The charge was made that the "anti-socialist forces sought to divert the Czechoslovak people from their socialist path, to restore a bourgeois order in that country and sever it from the socialist community. Things reached a point when five socialist states saw no alternative but to send troops to the assistance of the Czechoslovak people."

"Nothing can bring the Vietnamese people to their knees. There is no military solution for Washington. The greater the scale of the aggression, the heavier the defeats inflicted on the aggressors." These three statements which prefaced a Soviet Communist editorial on Vietnam effectively summarize the Russian position on the Vietnam war. The editorial stressed that despite the United States having "met with a political fiasco and . . . heavy defeats on the battlefield," it is continuing its aggression and threatens to extend the war into other countries of the Indo-Chinese Peninsula.

Yugoslavia

The Yugoslav Information Center, 816 Fifth Avenue, New York, New York, distributes Yugoslav News Bulletin (2,100) and Yugoslav Facts and Views (2,100), intermittent news sheets; and several booklets.

News from the Information Center frequently portrayed a new image of Yugoslavia on the international scene. The image was one of a new and independent socialism based on what Yugoslavia's President Tito called "a highly developed awareness of citizens." At a rally in November, Tito proclaimed, "We reject any copying of some other path to socialism since we live under our own specific conditions and our people have proved its capabilities in the great Liberation Struggle."

Yugoslavia presented itself as a follower of the policy of non-alignment, the substance of that policy being based on the following four "actions":

1. Yugoslav independence and freedom
2. active and peaceful co-existence
3. collective security against antagonistic power blocs
4. abolishing all forms of economic exploitation.

When discussing the nuclear non-proliferation treaty in May, Yugoslav Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs,

Marko Nikezic stated, "We consider the conclusion of an agreement to the prevention of further proliferation of nuclear weapons as useful and indispensable." He did, however, present these objections:

1. The treaty has no provision for disarmament
2. There are no guarantees to non-nuclear nations against attack from nuclear nations
3. There is no elimination of the monopoly on nuclear power in industry.

Despite these objections, Yugoslavia did proceed to vote in favor of the treaty in June.

Two areas of international tension were of great importance to the Yugoslavs in 1968. The invasion of Czechoslovakia and the war in Vietnam were frequently commented upon by the Information Center.

In July, the Central Committee of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia held "that the present changes in Czechoslovakia are primarily an expression of the objective need to consolidate and further develop socialist social relations." The Committee made it clear that it supported the freedom and independence of the Czechs and opposed foreign intervention. The September 25, 1968 issue of Yugoslav Facts and Views, after the Warsaw Pact's invasion of Czechoslovakia, declared that "The Communists and other citizens of Yugoslavia have in recent days overwhelmingly expressed their deep indignation and protest against the occupation of Czechoslovakia."

In April, President Tito expressed his satisfaction over the United States decision to initiate a partial bombing halt in North Vietnam, saying that it would lead to peace discussions and eventually to a complete bombing halt. He recalled Yugoslavia's attitudes toward the war, condemning American intervention and bombing which the Yugoslavs saw as contrary to the United Nations Charter.

In November, the Yugoslavs hailed President Johnson's decision to stop all bombing of North Vietnam as a major and significant step toward peace. They felt assured that now a political solution could be found that would give the Vietnamese people the chance to decide their own destiny.

The principal purpose of Congress in enacting the Foreign Agents Registration Act was to require public disclosure by persons engaging in propaganda activities and other activities for or on behalf of foreign governments, foreign political parties, and other foreign principals, so that the Government and the people of the United States may be informed of the identity of such persons and may appraise their statements and actions in the light of their associations and activities. The emphasis of the Department of Justice in its administration of the statute has been toward the achievement of this purpose. In performing its functions, the Department has continued to rely upon its normal sources of information and upon the investigative efforts of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Registration under the Act does not imply recognition by the United States Government either of the de jure existence or legality of the foreign principal, nor does registration indicate approval by the United States Government of the propaganda material disseminated or of the activities of the registered agent.

Respectfully submitted,

Attorney General
