REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
TO THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES
ON THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE
FOREIGN AGENTS REGISTRATION ACT OF 1938, AS AMENDED
FOR THE CALENDAR YEAR 1965

JULY 1966

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA IN CONGRESS ASSEMBLED:

I have the honor to report on the administration of the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended, pursuant to Section 11 of that Act which requires the Attorney General from time to time to report to the Congress concerning the administration of the Act, as well as the nature, source and content of political propaganda disseminated or distributed by agents of foreign principals registered under the Act.

It has been the policy of the Department since 1950 to prepare a report each year. This report covers the administration and enforcement of the Foreign Agents Registration Act for the calendar year 1965.

STATISTICAL SUMMARY

One hundred thirteen new registration statements were filed in 1965, and 82 registrations were terminated, leaving 511 active registrations on file as of December 31, 1965. This represents an increase over the 480 active registrations at the close of calendar year 1964.

Appendix I contains an alphabetical list of all persons whose registration statements under the Act were in active status at any time during 1965. New registrations received during 1965 are marked with an asterisk. Appendix II lists all registrations according to the geographical area or nationality field of the foreign principal which were in active status during the calendar year 1965, as well as a brief statement identifying the nature of the agency. Registrations terminated during the year are marked with the symbol (T).

When a registration statement is filed by a partnership, corporation, association, organization or other combination of individuals, each partner, officer, director or other person rendering assistance to the registrant on behalf of or in the interest of the foreign principal is required to file a short-form registration statement.

Appendix III contains an alphabetical listing of all short-form registrations which were in active status during 1965. There were 646 short-form registrations filed during the year by individuals as officers, directors, employees or other persons rendering assistance to the registrant in the interests of the foreign principal.

During 1965, 228 amending statements were filed to correct deficiencies in registration statements already on file. The Registration Section processed and reviewed 841 supplemental registration statements and processed over 7,286 pieces of correspondence from other government agencies, prospective registrants, and the general public.

ENFORCEMENT

Compliance with the Act is ordinarily obtained through normal administrative procedures.

A careful review of each statement filed generated many requests from the Department for further disclosure or other corrective action from registrants, and as indicated previously this resulted in the filing of 228 amended statements. No prosecutive action for willful violations of the Act was required to be undertaken during the year.

Section 5 of the Act requires that every registrant keep and maintain books of account and other records with respect to all his activities on behalf of his foreign principal. Such books and records are also required to be open at all reasonable times to the inspection of any official charged with the enforcement of the Act. The continuing program of inspections of selected registrants during 1965 resulted in greater compliance with the disclosure provisions of the Act and increased awareness of their importance.

Another aspect of the enforcement program was the continued dissemination to the interested departments and agencies of the Federal Government and certain Congressional committees of copies of the registration statements and supplements received. The information received in response to this practice concerning possible inadequate disclosure or violation of the Act warrants its continuation.

LEGISLATION

During 1964, the Senate considered and passed S. 2136, a bill introduced by Senators J. William Fulbright and Bourke B.

Hickenlooper designed to amend the Foreign Agents Registration Act. A companion Bill, H. R. 9212, was introduced in the House by Representative Emanuel Celler, but was not acted upon. The Bill was reintroduced in the Senate in January, 1965 as S. 693 and in the House of Representatives as H. R. 290. S. 693 was passed by the Senate on April 5, 1965, and was passed by the House of Representatives on May 16, 1966 with two minor amendments.* The Bill provides for greater and more explicit disclosure by agents who are engaged in political activities on behalf of their foreign principals. The Bill also provides a civil injunctive procedure whereby the Attorney General may apply to the United States District Court for an order enjoining such persons who are engaged in, or about to engage in, an act which will constitute a violation of the statute. In addition, the Bill provides a procedure whereby the Department may notify a registrant if his registration statement does not disclose the information required by the Act and specify in what respects the statement is deficient. It shall then be unlawful to act as an agent of a foreign principal at any time ten days or more after the receipt of such notification without filing an amended statement in full compliance with the Act. Furthermore, the proposed legislation authorizes the Attorney General to require a registrant to maintain separate books and records pertaining to his foreign principal thus facilitating an inspection of books and records as contemplated by Section 5 of the Act.

NATURE, SOURCE AND CONTENT OF POLITICAL PROPAGANDA

The following is an analysis of the principal trends noted during 1965 in the propaganda material disseminated within the United States in the English language on behalf of the foreign principals and geographical areas listed below. Principal publications are set forth together with the approximate circulation figures per issue.

Arab States

I. The League of Arab States, which is composed of Algeria, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Morocco, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, United Arab Republic, and Yemen, maintains the Arab Information Center (AIC), 757 Third Avenue, New York City, with branches located in Washington, D. C., Chicago, San Francisco, and Dallas. The two principal publications of the AIC are Arab News and Views, a bi-monthly sheet (13,500); and Arab World, a monthly magazine (23,000).

*On June 15, 1966 the Senate and House conferees agreed on a Bill to be presented for passage to both Houses of Congress.

The Palestine problem continued to be of central importance in Arab material disseminated here. In the material which it distributes, the AIC pictured Israel as an aggressive, expansionist power, occupying by force more land than was allotted to it by the United Nations and continually ignoring United Nations resolutions, asking for repatriation and/or compensation to the more than one million Arab refugees from the area. Arab League support was promised to the Palestine Liberation Organization, a government in exile pledged to the liberation of Palestine.

The League also expressed concern at Zionist propaganda in the United States, which was said to be distorting Arab positions. The key issue discussed in this regard was the Arab boycott. Denying charges of anti-Semitism made before the Senate in July by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, the AIC declared that the League is not anti-Semitic. AIC drew a distinction between Judaism, a religion of universal values, which was unopposed by Arabs, and Zionism, which the AIC declared was an international political movement. Thus, measures like the Arab boycott of all foreign firms doing business with Israel was described as anti-Israel rather than anti-Jewish, and a self-defensive measure. Trade which tended "to strengthen Israel economically and to bolster its military potential" was regarded as detrimental to the security of the Arab states.

Many articles traced the history of individual Arab countries, noting especially the glories of ancient civilizations. Modern advances were also stressed and frequent bids made for increased American trade and investment. The five-member Arab Common Market, in effect as of January 1, 1965, and an agreement on a joint Arab project for exploitation of the Jordan River, were particularly cited as examples of the progressiveness of the League. Members also hailed the Jeddah Agreement signed by King Faisal of Saudi Arabia and President Nasser of the United Arab Republic, ending the three-year civil war in Yemen. Arab World noted with approval that a national plebiscite is to be held in Yemen by November 23, 1966.

In the realm of international politics, League members stressed policies of nonalignment, desiring aid from both the United States and the Soviet Union, without conditions or pressures.

II. The United Arab Republic also distributes some material through Hamilton Wright Organization, Inc., 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City. These publications consist almost entirely of tourist information with occasional pamphlets describing industrial progress in the United Arab Republic.

III. Information pertaining to Saudi Arabia was distributed through the public relations firm of Hill & Knowlton, Inc., 150 East 42nd Street, New York City, which publishes a news sheet entitled People, Places and Products (1,000). Articles in this publication dealing with Saudi Arabia stressed the progress being made toward educational and economic modernization.

IV. The Palestine Arab Delegation, 441 Lexington Avenue, New York City, representing the Lebanon-based Arab Higher Committee for Palestine, disseminated intermittent press releases and letters to United States and United Nations officials (1,500). The central theme of this group's material was that American Near East policy since 1919 has been dictated by domestic Zionist pressure groups, rather than by moral principles or the United States' own best interest.

Strong protest was levied at the beginning of the year against "American pressure on West Germany", which resulted in that country's supplying considerable amounts of American-made arms to Israel. The United States was accused in this regard of contributing to the arms race in the Near East. Similarly, this country was charged with encouraging the proliferation of nuclear weapons by supplying aid to Israel, which facilitated the building of that nation's Dimona Atomic Reactor. It was requested that the United States use its influence to place the Dimona Reactor under United Nations supervision and control.

In other matters, the Palestine Arab Delegation defended the Arab boycott of Israel as comparable to United States economic reprisals against Cuba and Communist China.

V. A new Arab grouping, which first opened its offices in the United States in March 1965, is the Palestine Liberation Organization, 801 Second Avenue, New York City. Thus far its publications consist of a few press releases, United Nations speeches, and booklets. In these it was claimed that the organization represents the people of Palestine wherever they reside and is pledged to the restoration of Palestine to its former Arab inhabitants. This cause, it was said, is in accord with the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the principle of self-determination.

Zionism was described by the Palestine Liberation Organization as colonialist, expansionist, racist, segregationist, and fascist. In contrast, the Arab people were described as peace-loving and tolerant. The goal of the Palestine Liberation Organization in the United States was said to be the creation of a better understanding of the just cause of the Palestinian refugees.

Australia

The Australian News and Information Bureau, 636 Fifth Avenue, New York City, distributed the Australian Daily News (570), Australian News Weekly Roundup (1,870), and Australian Monthly Finance and Commerce Notes (125).

Most often stressed in Australian publications was that country's support of American involvement in Viet Nam. The fighting in Viet Nam was described as part of a pattern of Communist aggression against all of Asia, spearheaded by Communist China. The view was expressed that negotiations could not be conducted with the Viet Cong during 1965 except on the grounds of American withdrawal, and that such withdrawal would mean an abandonment both of American principles and of the responsibilities that belong to a great power. Australia's own fighting force in Viet Nam in October was said to number 1,500, and numerous non-military aid projects were described.

Another major area of concern for the Australians was their heavy trade and payments deficit with the United States. The Australian Government feared that this deficit would be aggravated by measures to safeguard United States balance of payments through the curtailment of foreign investment. The Australians hoped to overcome their dollar shortage by increasing their exports to the United States, but said they were hampered in this regard by American high tariffs on wool and quotas on lead, zinc, and meat. Several meetings with American officials were held to discuss the lowering of these trade barriers and the Australians expressed their pleasure when the President did remove American import quotas on lead and zinc in late October.

In other matters, the Australians expressed concern about the explosion of a nuclear device by Communist China, and continued in their opposition to her being seated in the United Nations. Support was pledged to Malaysia in the event of attack by Indonesia; but the Australians hoped for good relations with Indonesia and continued a program of limited aid to that country. In their foreign policy in general, the Australians described themselves as "standing firmly with Great Britain and the United States."

Belgium

The Belgian Government Information Center, 50 Rockefeller Plaza, New York City, distributed occasional press releases and pamphlets. A booklet entitled Memo from Belgium, No. 59, disseminated in January, 1965 (600) contained the text of a speech to the United Nations Security Council in December, 1964, by Mr. Paul-Henri Spaak. The speech justified the Belgian-American rescue of rebel-held hostages in Stanleyville and Paulis, the Congo, as a strictly humanitarian rescue operation, with no aim at military or territorial gain. Belgian assistance to the Leopoldville Government of President Tshombe in his struggle with the rebels was defended against charges of being interference in the internal affairs of a country, on the grounds that such assistance came at the request of the legally constituted government.

In other statements during the year the Belgian Government reaffirmed its support of NATO, stated a desire for more frequent contacts with Eastern Europe in a policy of peaceful coexistence, and voiced the hope that Great Britain might become a member of the European Economic Community.

Brazil

Two organizations disseminated information on Brazil, the Brazilian Government Trade Bureau, 551 Fifth Avenue, New York City, which distributes the monthly Brazilian Bulletin, and Curtis J. Hoxter, Inc., 880 Third Avenue, New York City, which issues press releases on Brazil (150).

The general theme of the material disseminated by these registrants was the economic stabilization being achieved through the anti-inflationary measures of President Castelo-Branco. The Branco Government, which came to power in March 1964, with the aid of the military, was described as popular and democratic, and intent on initiating sweeping social, political and economic reforms which would undercut Communist propaganda. Many appeals were made for increased American trade and investment on the basis of Brazil's new stability.

Also receiving considerable attention was Brazil's position on the Inter-American Peace Force for the Dominican Republic. The Bulletin noted that Brazil took the lead in pledging support to this force, which was subsequently put under Brazilian command. Brazil's Foreign Minister, Vasco Leitao de Cunha, was quoted during the early stages of the Dominican crisis as saying, in connection with the sending of troops, "I cannot comprehend that countries menaced by Communist subversion can condemn the courageous attitude of the United States".

British Guiana

The British Guiana Public Relations and Information Office, 114 East 40th Street, New York City, distributed industrial and trade information, as well as political pamphlets describing the new People's National Congress - United Force Coalition Government, which came to power in the December 1964, elections. In addition, the People's National Congress Party (Penaco Information Service, 1 East 42nd Street, New York City), leading member of the coalition, issued a weekly newspaper called New Nation (350).

Both sources stressed the transformation being wrought in British Guiana by the new government, most particularly, the re-establishment of economic stability and the return to tranquility after three years of racial violence. The former government, led by Cheddi Jagan, was described as corrupt, pro-Communist, and representative only of the Indian community, while the People's National Congress - United Force Coalition, was portrayed as a multi-racial "consultative democracy", in which Guianese workers, employers, industry, religious and other organizations all participate in a consultative capacity in the administration of the country.

While expressing a desire for United States aid and trade, the New Nation voiced a deep fear of possible American intervention as an accompaniment. The sending of United States troops into the Dominican Republic was sharply criticized as "imperialism - unwarranted and unjustifiable" and a threat to all territories in the Caribbean trying to rid themselves of colonialism. American race relations also came under attack in New Nation, which called for federal government suppression of "the white rebellion against the Civil Rights Bill".

Frequent demands were also made for complete independence of British Guiana from Great Britain.

China (People's Republic of)

Publications emanating from the People's Republic of China, often referred to as Communist China, were distributed in the United States by the following registered agents: Henry H. Noyes (dba China Books and Periodicals), 2929 24th Street, San Francisco, California; David Rosen (dba China Publications), 95 Fifth Avenue, New York City; and Philip Frankfeld (dba New Era Books), 80 East 11th Street, New York City. Among the major publications distributed were Peking Review, a weekly news magazine (976); China Pictorial (600) and China Reconstructs (600), monthly magazines; China's Screen, a quarterly (220); Evergreen, a bi-monthly youth magazine (75); Chinese Literature, monthly (75); China's Sports, monthly (40); Women of China, bi-monthly (25), and a number of small books and pamphlets, usually mailed to libraries and educational institutions (15).

By far the predominant theme of Communist China's publications here was acrid denunciation of American "imperialist" involvement in Viet Nam. The Chinese totally rejected negotiation proposals irrespective of the source, declaring that the only acceptable solution in Viet Nam was the complete and unconditional withdrawal of United States troops. President Tito of Yugoslavia was denounced as a "United States stool-pigeon" for urging peace negotiations without prerequisites from either side. Also denounced for his efforts in this regard was United Nations Secretary-General U. Thant. The Chinese declared that the United Nations had no right to interfere in the affairs of Viet Nam or Indo-China as a whole, and no "meddling" by that body would be tolerated.

The United Nations in general came under heavy censure in a great number of articles throughout the year. It was said that the United Nations is a mere tool of United States aggression, and should be thoroughly reorganized; moreover, high praise was given to Indonesia for her withdrawal from that body. Expulsion of the representatives of the Chiang Kai-shek government and the recognition of the People's Republic of China as the only lawful China were given as prerequisites for membership of Mao's regime in the United Nations.

Also subjected to the written onslaughts of the Chinese Communists throughout the year was the Soviet Union. "Khrushchevian revisionism" was declared to be continuing strong after Khrushchev, and the "peaceful coexistence" line of the Moscow government was sharply attacked as "capitulation to American imperialism", "great power chauvinism", and a betrayal of movements for national liberation. The Chinese also expressed fear of a union of the U.S.S.R. and India against China.

In a general review of the world scene, the Chinese Communists denounced the United States as "the most arrogant aggressor ever known to history, the most ferocious enemy of world peace, and the main prop of all the forces of reaction in the world". The People's Republic of China pledged its support to all those areas in Asia, Africa and Latin America attempting to escape the yoke of "United States neo-colonialism". China's own experience at development through a state-owned and operated planned economy was cited as a useful guideline to economically backward areas. These areas were described as being at the mercy of a world market controlled by imperialists who arbitrarily lowered the price of primary products while raising the price of manufactured goods. China's own trade and aid policy was capsuled in the formula "mutual support on the basis of equality and mutual benefit."

Much attention was given to Afro-Asian areas which strengthened their ties with China in the course of the year. Thus the Sino-Tanzania and China-Mali Friendship Treaties were highlighted, as were visits to China by government ministers from Uganda, Somalia, Mauritania, Cambodia, and Pakistan. In the Indo-Pakistani dispute over Kashmir, China gave its full support to Pakistan, denouncing India for tyrannical rule in Kashmir and border provocation against both Pakistan and China. The existence of this dispute plus several other conflicts among Afro-Asian countries were cited by China as reasons for the postponement of the Second Afro-Asian Conference originally scheduled for November.

In other Asian affairs, writers in the Peking Review were jubilant at the beginning of the year about Sino-Indonesian friendship, but greatly disturbed by the anti-Chinese reaction in that country following the Indonesian Army's suppression of a leftist coup begun in late September. Another neighbor, Thailand, was denounced as a "land of American bases" and a "bridgehead of United States aggression" against Viet Nam, Laos and Cambodia. China also expressed a desire for more trade with Japan, severely hampered it was claimed, by the pro-United States policies of the Sato Government. Also denounced was the peace treaty between Japan and the Republic of Korea, a treaty described as an indication of the fostering of Japanese militarism for a come-back to the Korean peninsula.

In other articles, China described its development of nuclear weapons solely as a defensive measure. Upon the explosion of its second atom bomb, China reiterated an earlier call for "a summit conference of all countries to discuss the complete prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons". She pledged, furthermore, never to be the first to use such weapons.

In addition, many articles dealt with the great progress reportedly being made in China's economic development. The period from 1961 through 1965, was described as one of readjustment and consolidation, preparatory to a new, Third Five-Year Plan beginning in 1966. The guiding principle of economic development was said to be "agriculture as the foundation and industry as the leading factor", and the branches of the economy were arranged in the order of priority of agriculture, light industry, and heavy industry. A campaign was also begun at the beginning of the year to bring "more, better and cheaper consumer goods to the 500 million peasants".

China (Republic of )

Material concerning the Republic of China is disseminated in the United States by the Chinese Information Service, 1270 Avenue of the Americas, New York City. The principal publications were News from China, a daily sheet (105); Free China Weekly, a newspaper (4,700); Background on China (130), and Features from China (70), intermittent feature sheets.

Much of the Republic of China's material was centered around the often repeated theme of "Recovery of the lost mainland is the nation's first and most imperative task."

In Asia, Communist China was said by the Nationalists to be the instigator and sustainer of "Indonesia's belligerence" toward Malaysia and Pakistan's attack on India. Moreover, in Thailand, Peking was said to be stepping up its own campaign of subversion with the formation in February of the "Thailand Patriotic Front". The foreign minister of Thailand was quoted as saying the Red Chinese had launched the first stage of a guerrilla war against Thailand by setting up secret ammunition depots and recruiting and training irregular forces.

In Africa, too, the Republic of China charged, the Chinese Communists were engaged in extensive subversion, including the supplying of arms to local rebels and the bribing of left-leaning politicians. Taipei also charged Red Chinese involvement in the murder of the former Burundi prime minister and the attempt on the life of Niger President Hamani Diori. The Congo Brazzaville was cited as the base for Communist subversion and the "New China News Agency" as a principal tool. Peking agents disguised as "correspondents" of the News Agency were said to be active in Dahomey, Ethiopia, Ghana, Guinea, Mali, Senegal, Somalia and Tanzania.

In contrast, the Nationalist Chinese described their program of agricultural assistance to African countries. It was claimed that since 1961 Taipei has sent farming demonstration teams to twelve African nations in two year programs to help increase their agricultural production. In addition, a new milestone in the Republic of China's foreign aid was hailed in the development of a program of direct loans and grants to African nations. Taipei expects to extend twenty million dollars in economic aid to Africa in the next few years, as well as to continue technical aid to the Asian areas of Malaysia, South Korea and South Viet Nam.

The Republic of China's sources noted that extensive aid to Africa was beginning at the same time that United States aid to Taiwan was ending. Commenting upon the termination of the United States AID mission on June 30, 1965, the News Service reports expressed deep gratitude to this country for its generous assistance in bringing Taiwan to a state of economic self-sufficiency. A dramatic increase in exports, establishment of a sound international credit rating, increased foreign investment, a forty-five percent rise in per capita product, and a tripling of industrial output were among the economic gains cited as taking place within the last ten years in Taiwan.

The war in Viet Nam was the subject of considerable comment by government and private news sources in the Republic of China. Among the proposals put forth in Taiwan newspapers were extension of the ground war into North Viet Nam through the employment of Asian troops, including those of the Republic of China; bombing of industrial centers in Hanoi; and opening a second front in the war through American air and sea support to a Republic of China attack on Hainan Island, which sits astride the sea lanes between the Chinese mainland and Southeast Asia. The proposal receiving by far the most support in Taiwan, however, was that of bombing Red China, itself, as the source of support for the Viet Cong. In this connection, the New Year's Message of President Chiang Kai-shek, in which he urged the destruction of nuclear installations on the Chinese mainland before the Communists can produce nuclear weapons or a delivery system, received wide attention. Commenting on this speech the newspaper, New Life Daily News, declared that in the event of such bombings the Soviet Union would not intervene because "it does not want the Chinese Reds to have nuclear weapons and does not wish to be drawn into a nuclear war."

The South East Asian Treaty Organization was another topic of discussion by the Nationalist Chinese, with several newspapers calling for the establishment of a new Anti-Communist league in Asia, equipped like NATO with a permanent military headquarters and a standing force for defense against aggressors.

Concerning the admission of Red China to the United Nations, President Chiang declared the United Nations was faced with a crucial test "involving the choice between good and evil, between right and wrong, and between international justice or injustice".

European Community (France, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, and Luxembourg)

The European Community maintains the European Community Information Service, 808 Farragut Building, Washington, D. C. Its publications in 1965 were European Community (34,000), a monthly news magazine; Labor in the European Community (1,450), a bimonthly magazine; and Common Market Farm Report (1,350), a monthly news sheet.

Rated high on the scale of Community achievements in 1965 by the Information Service publications was an agreement effecting the merger of the three executive departments of the European Economic Community, the European Coal and Steel Community and Euratom. These expect to be fused into a permanent, unified commission of nine members, sitting in Brussels. Walter Hallstein, EEC Commission President, was quoted as saying the merger is "the first step in the regrouping of all the economic and social policy in the shape of one Community which, in its course, is the first realization of union in other areas - general foreign policy and defense policy". (European Community, February, 1965)

Agriculture was accorded top priority on the Community agenda for 1965, and many measures were discussed aiming at the EEC Commission goal of a complete common market for all farm products by July 1, 1967, the date of the entry into force of common grain prices. However, farm policy discussions became deadlocked after June of 1965 as a result of a French walkout from the Council of Ministers. The French walkout resulted from their discontent with a farm financing proposal which would strengthen the powers of the European Parliament.

Also bearing a July 1, 1967 target date is the proposed Community Customs Union, achievement of which, according to Community publications, would maintain the fundamental balance between agriculture and industry in the Community's progress.

In the realm of external affairs, the Community devoted much attention to the Kennedy round of trade negotiations, aimed at achieving a fifty percent reduction in tariffs on industrial products and freer trade in agriculture. Progress toward the latter goal was hampered in 1965, it was claimed, by the French walkout. With regard to the United States-European relations, President Hallestein was frequently quoted as urging Europe to complete its unification in order to shoulder the "rights and burdens" of an Atlantic partnership. Dutch spokesmen were also quoted as favoring closer ties with the United States, in contrast to the French fears of being swallowed up in the Atlantic Community.

Also highlighted in Community publications were statements made by leaders of Great Britain's three major political parties advocating closer ties between their country and Europe. A possible precedent for a new form of association with other Commonwealth members was set in July with an agreement between Nigeria and the Community on a "sui generis" association, with selected tariff concessions from both parties. The three East African Commonwealth countries of Kenya, Uganda, and Tanzania are expected to follow suit. These associates would be distinct from the eighteen regular African associates which in addition to trade agreements receive economic and technical aid from Community members through the European Development Fund.

Finally, many articles dealt with specific successes of the Community, such as a fifty-one percent rise in industrial product from 1958 to 1964 in contrast to a forty-three percent rise in the United States. A major problem continued to be an insufficient supply of skilled workers to meet the demands of an expanding economy. In this connection, measures to encourage migration of workers to underemployment areas, regardless of national boundaries, and proposals for a common vocational training policy were described.

European Free Trade Association (Austria, Denmark, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, Associate: Finland)

Representing the European Free Trade Association in the United States is the EFTA Information Office, Suite 714, 711 Fourteenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C. Its two principal publications were the biweekly EFTA Reporter (14,450) and the monthly EFTA Bulletin (550).

Two main currents of thought, the development of internal EFTA cooperation and new initiative towards cooperation between EFTA and the European Economic Community, directed EFTA activity in 1965. With regard to internal trends, the EFTA reported that the dismantling of tariff and other barriers will result by the end of 1966 in a single market comparable to that of the EEC. Average income per person in the EFTA countries was reported to be higher in 1963 than that in the EEC, while growth in gross national product was said to be averaging nearly four percent per annum.

EFTA publications repeatedly stress, however, that the basic object of the Association is the creation of a single free market embracing the whole of Western Europe. There was considerable disquiet within EFTA about the possibilities of an indefinite prolongation of the division of Western Europe into two separate trading groups. The fear was expressed that with both trading groups rapidly nearing zero in their internal tariffs, failure to build bridges between the two at this time might worsen the situation and lead to greater rigidities.

The fact that member countries are heavily dependent on foreign trade was given as the reason for EFTA endeavors toward freer trade all over the world. In this regard, the foreign ministers of member countries were quoted as stressing the paramount importance of a successful outcome of the Kennedy Round of tariff cutting negotiations of the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Ghana

The Ghana Information Services, 565 Fifth Avenue, New York City, disseminated Ghana Today, a news pamphlet, and press releases at random time intervals.

Considerable attention was focused in Ghanaian publications distributed here in 1965 on speeches by President Kwame Nkrumah advocating a continental union government of a united Africa. Such a union, Nkrumah declared, would immediately make the states of Africa a mighty world influence. In his words, "we shall then be in a far better position to liberate our brothers in colonial bondage and rule, to drive out imperialism and neo-colonialism from our continent, to make us a powerful ally of the Asian peoples in their own struggle against imperialism, and to make us an effective force for world peace". President Nkrumah also cited a government of Africa as an essential prerequisite for effective economic development throughout the continent.

Also noted was Ghana's own economic problem which resulted principally from a great drop in the price of cocoa, Ghana's main export crop, at the very time that country's development plans called for an increase in imports of machinery and equipment. President Nkrumah was quoted as describing this adverse payments situation as the result of a deliberate policy of neo-colonialism practiced by the industrial nations, who were said to arbitrarily depress the prices of raw materials while raising the prices of manufactured goods. President Johnson's statement in September, 1965, that the United States would seek ways to stabilize the price of cocoa was, accordingly, greatly welcomed in Ghana.

The main economic pillars of the Ghanaian state were said by President Nkrumah to be the state-owned enterprises both in industry and agriculture, and plans were announced for the further expansion of the public sector of the economy. Dr. Nkrumah was quoted as rejecting the concept of a specifically "African socialism", declaring instead that there was only scientific socialism, valid the world over. What Ghanaians call "Nkrumaism" was said to be scientific socialism applied to countries emerging from colonialism, and specifically African countries where the Marxist capital-labor conflict is only one of a number of fundamental conflicts. Other conflicts cited were "the neo-colonialist conflict", tribalist and feudalist contradictions, and divergencies between the Euro-Christian, Islamic, and traditional strands of African society. Many of these ideas were said to be developed in President Nkrumah's books, Africa Must Unite and Consciencism.

Great Britain

The British Information Service (BIS), 845 Third Avenue, New York City, distributes an abundance of material relating to Great Britain. Its principal publications were Today's British Papers (769) and British Weeklies (620), composed of reprints of articles on current affairs by British daily and weekly newspapers; British Record (9,300), a bi-monthly political and economic notes; and various information sheets, pamphlets and other publications.

Of paramount importance to Great Britain in the latter part of 1965 was the unilateral declaration of independence by the white settlers' Government of Rhodesia on November 11, 1965. BIS provided considerable background material on the crisis as well as the texts of principal declarations by Prime Minister Wilson and Foreign Secretary Steward. Mr. Wilson spoke of a "deep difference in philosophy", dividing the two governments, and Commonwealth Secretary Bottomley was quoted as saying "the argument is about racial equality. . . . We are determined that there must be eventually majority rule in Rhodesia. . . that there must also be eventually racial equality in Rhodesia." (The British Record, November 24) That "eventually" did not mean "immediately" was stressed in all ministerial statements. British retaliatory measures against Rhodesia, including an oil embargo, were described, and appreciation expressed for the support of such measures given by the United States and other countries.

In other world affairs, Prime Minister Wilson was quoted as stressing the crucial importance of a nuclear non-proliferation treaty in 1966, saying, "if we do not succeed in negotiating an effective and water-tight treaty to stop the spread of nuclear weapons, the world may have passed the point of no return". (The British Record, December 22, 1965) The necessity of Communist China's participation in such a treaty was cited as a reason for the British Government's support of Peking's admission to the United Nations.

A strengthening of the United Nations was the aim of continued British support for a permanent United Nation's peacekeeping force. The Dominican Republic was cited as an area where such a force would have been particularly effective, alleviating the United States' burden of responsibility.

In European affairs, BIS quoted Government ministers as desiring both greater European unity and a firmer Atlantic partnership. Lord Walston, Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, was quoted as saying "a United Europe outside the Atlantic Community and seeking to rival the United States makes no sense politically, economically, or militarily." (The British Record, June 16, 1965)

In Commonwealth affairs, it was announced that British Guiana would become independent on May 26, 1966, under the name of Guyana, while in Great Britain itself, the major 1965 news item was the Labor Government's announcement of its proposals for nationalizing the steel industry.

Guatemala

Curtis J. Hoxter, Inc., 880 Third Avenue, New York City, distributes a few information sheets on behalf of the Government of Guatemala. In 1965, these publications concentrated on the preparations for a new constitution and free elections which, it was said, would re-introduce democracy to Guatemala. Credit for a great improvement in the political and economic situation of the nation was given to Colonel Enrique Peralta Azurdia who took over as President of Guatemala in March, 1963, to counteract Communist influences. Under Peralta, the Hoxter pamphlets reported, Guatemala's 1964 budget for the first time in seven years achieved a $1.5 million surplus and industrial development moved ahead by eleven percent. In addition, United States AID projects were credited with assisting in the improvement of social conditions and government administration.

India

The Information Service of the Embassy of India, 2107 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., disseminated three regular publications: Indiagram, a daily news sheet, India News, a weekly paper, and Foreign Affairs Record, a monthly magazine, as well as occasional background news sheets and pamphlets.

Relations with Pakistan were India's gravest concern in 1965. Indian publications reported in great detail border skirmishes between the two countries in the Rann of Kutch area in the beginning of the year, as well as the large scale fighting in Kashmir in August and September. In both instances, India protested against Pakistan's use of American arms which, India said, were given to Pakistan solely to fight Communism and under the specific conditions that they were not to be used against India. India also charged that Pakistan was allied with Communist China in a joint design against India.

The Indian position on a plebiscite in Kashmir was discussed in some detail by Mr. B. K. Nehru, Ambassador of India to the United States (in a speech delivered before the St. Louis Council on World Affairs). Mr. Nehru stressed that, according to the United Nations resolutions of 1948, a plebiscite was to be held in Kashmir only after the withdrawal of Pakistani troops from the area which they occupied a withdrawal which never took place. Subsequently, Mr. Nehru attested, the people of Kashmir elected a Constituent Assembly which in 1951 ratified their accession to India. Moreover, since that date, two further elections on the basis of universal suffrage were held in which the opponents of accession were defeated. As a result, India regards Kashmir as an integral part of the Indian Union and refuses to hold a plebiscite there "at the behest of a foreign power".

In the same speech Mr. Nehru dismissed the theory that, if the Kashmir problem were somehow settled, India and Pakistan would join forces against expansionist China. Citing the total rejection of this viewpoint by the Foreign Minister of Pakistan, Mr. Nehru went on to describe Kashmir as "not the cause but the symbol and symptom of the conflict between these two countries, which is a conflict both of ideology and of power". The conflict of ideology was synthesized by Mr. Nehru as follows: "India is a forward-looking, progressive, secular, multi-racial, multi-religious, tolerant democracy, based on exactly the same principles and having exactly the same values. . . as the United States"..."Pakistan is an intolerant, theocratic and semi-military dictatorship which discriminates to such an extent against the non-Muslim minority that even their lives and property are not safe." Mr. Nehru saw no possibility of peaceful coexistence between the two countries so long as Pakistan continued in what he described as a policy both of open attack and of attempts at subverting the loyalty to India of her Muslim minority.

Commenting on other events in Asia, Indian sources described Red China's explosion of a second atomic bomb as a "blow to the security of the world" and a serious setback to efforts for peace and human welfare. Prime Minister Shastri was quoted as saying that despite the danger from China, India would continue to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes only. Shastri also called for greater efforts by the major powers to agree on disarmament and non-proliferation treaties. On the subject of Viet Nam, the Government of India appealed to both sides for the creation of the necessary atmosphere which would enable a Geneva type conference to be held with the least possible delay.

Indonesia

The Embassy of Indonesia, 2020 Massachusetts Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., disseminates a weekly, News Release.

Highlighted in January, 1965, was Indonesia's withdrawal from the United Nations after the seating of Malaysia in the Security Council. Embassy reports indicated that Indonesia hoped its action would be a catalyst to reform and retool a United Nations said to be manipulated by colonial and neo-colonial powers. President Sukarno was quoted as proposing two possible solutions of the Malaysia dispute, the first being a summit conference of the heads of state of Malaysia, the Philippines, and Indonesia, which would include an agreement on a plebiscite in North Borneo. The alternative suggested was mediation by a four nation Afro-Asian Conciliation Committee. Sukarno was also quoted as saying he would welcome Japan's mediation. With talks or without them, however, Sukarno stressed that Indonesia "is determined to crush the neo-colonialist project of Malaysia."

Relations with another neighbor, Communist China, were reported to be strengthened in March of 1965, with the signing of an agreement for scientific and technological cooperation. Under the agreement, the two countries will exchange scientists, technological experts, periodicals, data, and specimens. Foreign Minister Subandrio was quoted as rejecting the idea of a military agreement with China, however, saying "we will stick to the non-alignment policy." Nevertheless, he made it clear that Indonesia would purchase arms from any country that offered them.

Embassy publications also reported Indonesian talks with Japan in early 1965, resulting in the acceleration of economic projects already agreed upon.

The papers expressed cautious hope for an improvement in United States-Indonesian relations. However, they also reported a unanimous resolution by the Indonesian Parliament strongly condemning "subversive action, intervention, aggression and the extension of war by American imperialists in Indochina." United States activities in Laos and Cambodia, as well as in Viet Nam, were heavily censured.

The last issue of the News Release received by the Department was dated August 13, 1965, and consequently, there were no reports from the Indonesian Embassy on the internal situation in that country received in the Department after the October first upheaval there.

Israel

Two registrants provided information on Israel in 1965. The Jewish Agency - American Section, 515 Park Avenue, New York City, distributed the Israel Digest, a biweekly news pamphlet (8,000), press releases (125), and other material. The Israel Information Service, 11 East 70th Street, New York City, distributed News from Israel (8,000), a biweekly newsletter; Land of the Bible, a bimonthly pamphlet (17,000); press releases (400), and other publications.

Israel's relations with the Arab States were accorded central importance in her publications distributed in the United States. The Arab plan to divert the headwaters of the Jordan River was described as a violation of the Johnston Plan for use of the water by the four riparian states, and Israeli Foreign Minister Mrs. Golda Meir was quoted as saying that Israel would defend its water rights, "just as we defend our territory and villages".

Arab establishment of a unified military command and the formation of the "Palestine Liberation Organization", said to recruit soldiers among Arab refugees, were cited by Israel as proof of continued Arab aggressive aims. President Nasser of Egypt was declared to be the Arab leader responsible for introducing the most modern armaments into the region and intensifying the arms race. Israel's own policy, on the other hand, was described as one of striving toward complete and mutual disarmament by herself and her Arab neighbors, subject to mutual inspection.

On the question of the Palestinian refugees, Israel demanded that any refugee joining the "Palestinian Liberation Army" be stricken from the United Nations Relief and Works Agency assistance rolls, while at the same time she offered financial aid to the resettlement of the refugees in Arab countries.

Finally, on the subject of Arab-Israeli relations, Israel declared it the duty of all countries believing in peace, law, and sovereignty to "boycott the Arab boycott". In this connection, warm praise was accorded to the anti-boycott provisions of the United States Export Control Act (H.R. 7105) signed into law on June 30, 1965.

Israel's establishment of diplomatic relations with West Germany in March of 1965 received considerable attention in Israeli reports on foreign affairs. Israel's aspiration to strengthen her position within the new European Community was given as one of the major reasons for the action. Concerning relations with another nation, China, the Israelis expressed disappointment at that country's antagonism, especially in view of the fact that Israel was among the first to recognize the Peking Government. Israel voted against the admission of Communist China to the United Nations because of the clause demanding the expulsion of Taiwan. According to The Israel Digest, Israel's position is that member states should not be expelled from the United Nations, and that the organization should be all-inclusive.

Summing up Israel's endeavors in the domain of international cooperation, The Israel Digest reported that close to a thousand Israeli experts are serving in fifty-five countries, and that some 2,100 students from 80 countries underwent training in Israel in 1964. Police work, tourism and nutrition were some of the subjects studied.

In internal developments, Israeli publications reported a six to seven percent growth in agricultural production, an eleven percent jump in industrial production, and an eight to nine percent expansion in gross national product. Immigration was termed the central problem of the State of Israel, with all plans in agriculture, industry and other areas founded on large-scale immigration. In this regard, the publications reported that Israel's attention was directed first to the over three million Jews in the Soviet Union.

Japan

The United States-Japan Trade Council, 1000 Connecticut Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., an organization made up of American and Japanese business organizations with offices in the United States, distributes intermittent press releases (260), a newsletter (2,000), and pamphlets on various matters affecting the interests of the Council. Another registrant, the Japan Trade Center, 393 Fifth Avenue, New York City, disseminates press releases and pamphlets on behalf of the Japanese Government's External Trade Organization.

In a brochure entitled How the Japanese People Live Today, the Japan Trade Center refuted the charges against modern Japan of "cheap labor" and "unfair competition". According to the Trade Center, when all factors are taken into consideration, the living standard in present-day Japan can be considered to be at one-third the level of the United States and fast approaching the level of England and West Germany.

Statistics provided by the United States-Japan Trade Council revealed that for nearly two decades the United States has exported more to Japan than to any other country except Canada. Chief among the items exported have been cotton, machinery, and wheat, Japan being the largest buyer of the latter United States commodity in the world today. During the last ten-year period, the total excess of exports over imports in our trade with Japan has amounted to 2.8 billion dollars.

Korea (Republic of)

The Embassy of Korea, 1828 Jefferson Place, N. W., Washington, D. C., distributed Korean Report, a tri-monthly magazine.

Korea's signing of a peace treaty with Japan, establishing normal diplomatic relations after fourteen years of negotiations, was one of the major Korean news items in 1965. President Chung Hee Park described the treaty as imperative for the two countries, which now face the common enemy of international communism. Under the treaty, Japan will provide Korea outright with 300 million dollars in economic grants, 200 million dollars in long term development loans, and will facilitate another 300 million dollars in commercial loans. Korea, in turn, will renounce further restitution claims against Japan and agree to equitable fishing rights in the common waters.

Korean ties with the United States were highlighted by the visit of President Park to this country in May, and by Korea's sending 2,000 combat engineers and a 15,000-man combat division to Viet Nam.

Korea's central role in the struggle against communism in Asia was emphasized by the Korean Report in noting the location of the Freedom Center of the Asian Peoples' Anti-Communist League in Seoul, Korea. Dedicated in December, 1964, the Center was described as a research and training institution with the aim of formulating anti-communist theory, educating anti-communist leaders and staging vigorous anti-communist public-relations activities. President Park has pledged that Korea will make every effort to develop the Center, in conjunction with the other Asian Peoples' Anti-Communist League member nations, i. e., Nationalist China, the Philippines, Thailand and South Viet Nam.

In internal developments, the Korean Government initiated a seven-year grain production plan calling for self-sufficiency in food production by 1967 and a sizable exportable surplus by 1971. According to the Korean Report, the Korean economy has made great strides in the past 20 years, especially in the industrial sector where exports increased in 1964 to 120 times the total of 1947.

Pakistan

The Embassy of Pakistan distributed Pakistan Affairs, a biweekly news sheet, Interim Report Series, a report sheet on economic developments and occasional pamphlets.

The fighting in Kashmir received the greatest attention in Pakistani publications during 1965. India was accused of violating the cease-fire line and attacking Pakistani territory without provocation. Following the United Nations-arranged cease fire in September, Pakistan reiterated its demand for a plebiscite in Kashmir, as agreed to by both parties in the United Nations resolution of 1948. Pakistan described the Kashmiri uprising of early August as a completely internal popular revolt, without Pakistani involvement, and proof of the continued dissatisfaction of the Kashmiris with India's tyrannical rule.

The Pakistani Government further noted that since 1948, the United Nations has proposed twelve different solutions for Kashmir, all of which have been accepted by Pakistan but rejected by India and that Foreign Minister Bhutto's most recent proposal of a total withdrawal of Indian and Pakistani troops from Jammu and Kashmir and their replacement by a United Nations force from African, Asian and Latin American countries as a preliminary to a United Nations supervised plebiscite was also rejected by India. Pakistan Affairs also highlighted what is called the "anomaly" of India's walking out of the Security Council's debate on Kashmir, since that nation has always placed itself in the forefront of proponents of free and full debate of differences at the United Nations.

Pakistan reiterated its desire to live in peace with India, in order that the energies of both could be freed for internal, social and economic development. Instead, India was accused of employing "aggression" against Pakistan to divert the attention of its people from disastrous economic problems at home.

Pakistan's own economy, on the other hand, was described as progressing at an astonishing rate. As the country ended its Second Five Year Plan in June and embarked on its Third Plan, great gains were recorded in both agriculture and industry. The most striking achievement in agriculture was reportedly the country's attainment of self-sufficiency in food production. In this connection, Pakistan Affairs quoted a New York Times article which observed that Pakistan, the world's fifth most populous nation, may be on its way to an economic milestone that so far has been reached by only one other populous country, the United States -- that is, the production of enough food to feed its entire population. To insure continued progress in this area, Pakistan has included a comprehensive program of family planning in its Third Five Year Plan.

Pakistani reports attributed their economic growth in great measure to the implementation of a clause in the Second Plan declaring that "Maximum scope will be given to private enterprise in the development of the resources of the country". In the industrial sector, where Pakistan's rate of growth is one of the highest in the world, government policy has given bigger scope to private industry than almost any other developing country, with the result that some 70 percent of the nation's manufacturing establishment is in the private sector. Pakistan Affairs described the expanding economy as opening up new opportunities for United States exporters, who already supply 42 percent of Pakistan's total imports. One of these imports is steel, Pakistan currently being the United States' largest overseas buyer.

At the beginning of 1965, President Ayub Khan's election to a new five year term is highlighted as a triumph for the presidential system. On a major foreign policy issue, President Ayub was quoted as continuing to offer Pakistan's services as "an honest broker" between the United States and China, declaring "I think one day the United States may well find it is really imperative that it should have some sort of relations with China . . . If the Chinese are driven against the wall they will explode and Americans would not gain by it."

Portugal

Two registrants distributed material favorable to the Portuguese Government. Downs and Roosevelt, Inc., 1629 K Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., represented in the United States the Overseas Companies of Portugal (OCP), which is an organization of companies that have business interests in Portugal and Portuguese overseas provinces. OCP publications consisted of booklets describing many aspects of life in Portuguese Africa, as well as reprints of articles in United States newspapers. A second registrant, the Casa de Portugal, 447 Madison Avenue, New York City, distributed pamphlets on Angola and Mozambique, the texts of major speeches by Prime Minister Salazar, and material supplied to them by the Overseas Companies of Portugal.

"An oasis of peace" was the description of Portugal's territories in Africa found in Portuguese publications disseminated here. Roberto Holden, leader of an unsuccessful military campaign against Angola in March 1961 from a base in the Congo, was declared to be completely lacking in popular support. Holden's followers, according to Portuguese material, were drunken, dope-filled mercenaries, and Holden himself an admitted receiver of Communist support. According to OCP material, the United States, through its extensive financial aid to the Congo where Holden is based, has in effect joined the Soviet Union and Chinese Communists in trying to defeat a NATO ally. According to these publications, "the United States furnishes the military base, the Communists furnish war material, and the Algerians train the soldiers."

In one of these publications it was said that "The most important ingredient for African revolution is missing in Portuguese Africa. The Portuguese have never been race conscious and the intense racial hatred engendered elsewhere in Africa does not exist in Angola and Mozambique. The Portuguese have always been proud of their racial harmony, and point to Brazil as a nation they fostered which has unusually good race relations, as well as much assimilation and intermarriage." OCP publications also described in some detail Portugal's crash program of education, health, welfare and economic development initiated in the territories in 1961.

Portuguese material also warned the United States not be taken in by mere "slogans" of self-determination and anti-colonialism. As represented in these pamphlets, the Portuguese Government's view of self-determination is that it cannot be attained through the mechanism of a plebiscite, but must be attained gradually by giving the people of colonial territories the opportunity for a progressive participation in decision making. The franchise in the African territories was said to be the same as in Portugal, i. e., universal adult suffrage based on being either literate, a taxpayer, or a householder.

Publications in opposition to Portugal's rule in Africa were disseminated by the Angola Office, 503 Fifth Avenue, New York City, as an agent of the Angola National Liberation Front, Leopoldville, Republic of the Congo, and by Joseph Massinga, 324 West 84th Street, New York City, as an agent of Frelimo, a liberation movement headed by Eduardo Mondlane, with headquarters in Dar-es-Salaam, Tanganyika. The Angola Office distributed Free Angola (400), while Massinga distributed Mozambique Revolution (350).

The material of both groups accused Portugal of committing "atrocities" against the African people, including political oppression, racial discrimination and economic exploitation through forced labor. In addition, the Frelimo group castigated the United States and its Western allies for refusing to condemn Portugal in the United Nations and for supplying arms to that country. The American people were asked to demonstrate their sympathy for the oppressed peoples in the world and protest against United States Government policy.

South Africa

The Information Service of South Africa, 655 Madison Avenue, New York City, distributes several publications dealing with that country. Included are South African Summary, a weekly news sheet (4,800); Business Report, a weekly review of economic matters (3,100); South African Scope, a monthly news magazine (14,000); South African Panorama, a monthly pictorial magazine (2,000), and a number of pamphlets, published intermittently.

South Africa's policy of "separate development", or apartheid, was the focal point of its material distributed in the United States. The objectives of government policies toward separate Bantu "homelands" was said to be a progression for the Bantu from self-government, to autonomy, and finally to independence. When the latter stage of development has been reached, the government envisions South Africa as a "multi-national commonwealth or common market, with political independence and economic interdependence".

Apartheid was said to have grown out of the peculiar needs of a South Africa which is multi-national as well as multi-racial. The Bantu peoples, reportedly as different from each other as the nations of Europe, were said to have no prior claim to South Africa, since the European immigrants of the 17th century settled in uninhabited territory, encountering the Bantus only as that group moved southward from Central and East Africa. The problem of assimilating the two cultures was portrayed in South African publications as analogous to the American colonist's experience with the Indian; and apartheid was described as the only way of safeguarding the identity and nationhood of both major groups.

Many reports detailed the economic and social progress being made by the Bantus through extensive government assistance programs. Eighty percent of all Bantu children were said to be literate, a much higher figure than in any other area in Africa. In addition, government reports described the Bantu as having a higher living standard than his counterpart anywhere else in Africa, and even higher than millions of laborers in Eastern Europe. A solid Bantu middle class was reported to be developing. As proof of the attractiveness of South African life, Information Service material stated that thousands of Africans were constantly entering South Africa illegally, joining the one million foreign Africans (10 percent of the Bantu population) already in the country. The South Africans described their country, internally, as one of the most peaceful in the world, and contrasted this condition with the turmoil in the rest of Africa.

In its foreign relations, South Africa declared itself to be the only country in Africa unequivocally aligned with the West, both in fact and outlook. Information Service publications warned of ever increasing Communist subversion on the African continent and pledged South Africa's continuance as a guardian of its strategic tip. The West was reminded that South Africa had come to the assistance of the United States and the free world in two world wars, the Berlin air-lift, and the Korean War. In addition, South Africa was said to be currently helping the United States in its balance of payments position by importing far more from the United States than it exported and by giving a return of 13 percent on American investments. It was also noted that South Africa had never asked for nor received American foreign aid.

Concerning its relations with other African nations, South Africa charged that the case brought against its rule in South West Africa by Liberia and Ethiopia was part of a "political campaign", and "based on emotional grounds rather than objective grounds concerned with the well-being and progress of peoples." Citing its aid to Mozambique, and Malawi in the building of sugar mills, government reports declared that South Africa was in a particularly favorable position to contribute to the welfare of underdeveloped Africa and would be glad of the opportunity to do so on a basis of mutual respect.

Spain

The Embassy of Spain, 2700 Fifteenth Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., distributes Spanish Newsletter, a monthly magazine, Spanish Topics, pamphlets on a variety of subjects, and Espana Semanal, a weekly newsletter in Spanish.

These publications primarily detailed the achievements attained by Spain since the liberalization of its economy in 1959, and the initiation of a four year development plan in 1964. Plans were also announced for a vigorous effort to promote Spain's exports to the United States. Cited as examples of the progressiveness of the Spanish regime were measures to restrict monopolies, an extensive vocational training program, an agrarian social security program, and a massive anti-illiteracy campaign. Spanish publications also directed attention to the building of the nation's first nuclear power plant to be completed in 1967.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics

Six registered organizations disseminated printed material emanating from the Soviet Union in 1965. Four Continent Book Corporation, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and Imported Publications and Products, 1 Union Square, New York City, handled such material as Moscow News, a weekly newspaper (144); New Times, a weekly news magazine (33); International Affairs, a monthly journal (51); Soviet Union (90), Soviet Woman (19), and Culture and Life (13), monthly pictorial magazines, as well as a number of books, pamphlets and non-English publications, including Sovietisch Heimland (1,900) in Hebrew.

Eastern News Distributors, Inc., 253-255 Seventh Avenue, New York City, distributes Moscow News (11,530) and Soviet Film, a monthly film magazine (4,000).

Cross World Books and Periodicals, 333 South Wacker Drive, Chicago 6, Illinois, and Philip Frankfeld, dba New Era Books, 80 East 11th Street, New York City, sell books published in the Soviet Union. Crosscurrents Press, New York City, which terminated its registration in May, 1965, published a weekly collection of official Soviet statements entitled Soviet Documents, which were distributed by the Soviet Embassy and the Soviet United Nations Mission.

Very few Soviet publications in 1965 were without articles denouncing American "aggression" in Viet Nam. The only acceptable solution for the Vietnamese problem, according to these publications would be the withdrawal of all United States troops from the area and a settlement by the Vietnamese themselves, "on the basis of the National Liberation Front programme." Wide coverage was given to American protest demonstrations, which were seen as a sign that ordinary Americans were rejecting official propaganda, "with all its jingoism, anti-communism and 'American superiority.'" American concepts of freedom and respect for human rights were derided in the light of the "rampant racialism" in the United States, said to be exemplified by the disturbances in Los Angeles in August.

Also receiving considerable attention in Soviet material was West Germany. U.S.S.R. publications reviewed in great detail the crimes of the Nazis and warned that "militarists" and "revanchists" were directing the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany. They also warned that a "German Maffia", powerful pro-German lobbyists in Washington, were influencing American policy in a manner contradictory to the United States' own best interest. With regard to the reduction of nuclear armaments, Soviet ministers declared that a non-proliferation treaty was absolutely incompatible with any agreements for a joint nuclear organization within NATO and the provision of nuclear weapons for West Germany.

Both NATO and the Common Market were seen to be in distress, due to the "sober-minded and far-sighted policy of France". NATO was said to be a tool of United States domination in Western Europe (excluding France) and the United States troops - an occupation army, with the main purpose of protecting American capital investments in Europe. The Common Market was described as a chain binding France to the more powerful West Germany and opening the door to still greater American penetration. In contrast, Moscow welcomed improved French-Soviet relations, including an agreement envisaging a nearly 70% trade increase between the two nations during the next five years. Soviet publications stressed the bond between "the two countries which in the past suffered the greatest losses from German militarism."

World trade came under discussion in several articles. The over-all trade picture of the U.S.S.R. was portrayed as one of ever-increasing growth. Although trade with other Communist countries now accounts for 70 percent of Russia's foreign trade, the articles emphasized that exchanges with the developing nations and with the West are rapidly expanding. Moscow welcomed the setting up of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, declaring that it will be far more beneficial to the developing countries than the Kennedy Round of GATT negotiations, which the Soviets predicted will benefit significantly only the advanced nations. Moscow also contrasted its policy, begun January 1st, of abolishing all duties on the goods of underdeveloped countries with the policy of the Western powers of giving special tariff privileges to some, to the detriment of others.

The Soviet economic reform of September which received much attention in the Western press was examined in some detail by government spokesmen. Although the reform greatly reduces the role of the central planners and places new emphasis on market and profit factors pertaining to individual factories, Soviet publications stressed that "planning remains the dominant and decisive factor". Industrial production for 1965 was expected to be 84 percent above the 1958 level, four percent more than the target of 80 percent increase set for the seven year period. Agricultural output, on the other hand, was expected to be two or three percent below that of 1964, and a new five-year agricultural plan was put forth in March calling for a substantial increase in agricultural spending. Every part of the Soviet Union, even the most remote and formerly backward areas, were described as rapidly modernizing under progressive Socialism, "synonymous with development and peace".

Yugoslavia

The Yugoslav Information Center, 816 Fifth Avenue, New York City, distributes Yugoslav News Bulletin, an intermittent news sheet (880) and Yugoslav Life, a monthly newspaper (530).

Yugoslavia's Economic and Social Development Plan for 1965 received the greatest attention in Information Service publications distributed here. The two key phrases used in characterizing the new plan were "self-government" and "decentralization". New stimuli were said to be provided for the further development of self-government in all spheres, both economic and non-economic organizations. In line with the decentralization of the economic system, an ever-increasing portion of an enterprise's funds will be left at its own disposal, rather than coming under the management of the central administration. The new plan also provides for a redistribution of the social product in favor of personal consumption and a higher standard of living. According to the Yugoslav bulletins, the 1965 Plan was the subject of large scale public discussion, the broadest ever held on an economic plan.

An intensive campaign for the expansion of exports to both the developed and underdeveloped world was also part of Yugoslavia's 1965 economic program. Noting that more than fifty percent of their trade is with the industrialized West, Yugoslav sources regarded as of great significance plans for their accession to full membership in GATT. Yugoslav trade with the United States in 1964 was said to amount to 14 billion dinars (at the then existing rate of 750 dinars to one dollar) in exports and 47 billion dinars in imports, primarily agricultural products.

Yugoslavia's position as a leader of the non-aligned countries also received considerable emphasis. A March meeting of fifteen non-aligned countries in Belgrade made a strong appeal to both sides in the Viet Nam conflict for negotiations without any prior conditions.

In other articles of international import, the Yugoslavs expressed firm support for the United Nations and sharply attacked Communist China's proposal for a "revolutionary" United Nations. The Belgrade daily, Borba, described the Chinese scheme as "the same approach to which Chinese leaders resort toward their neighbors and in the international workers movement -- to split and undermine all that exists, to threaten and use force, all in the interests of a greater China hegemony". However, Yugoslavia was also said to be of the opinion that the United Nations should become universal as soon as possible.

Several articles expressed a desire for increased trade and scientific and cultural exchanges with the United States in order to better mutual understanding.

The principal purpose of Congress in enacting the Foreign Agents Registration Act was to require public disclosure by persons engaging in propaganda activities and other activities for or on behalf of foreign governments, foreign political parties and other foreign principals, so that the Government and the people of the United States may be informed of the identity of such persons and may appraise their statements and actions in the light of their associations and activities. The emphasis of the Department of Justice in its administration of the statute has been toward the achievement of this purpose. In performing its functions, the Department has continued to rely upon its normal sources of information and upon the investigative efforts of the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Registration under the Act does not imply recognition by the United States Government either of the de jure existence or legality of the foreign principal nor does registration indicate approval by the United States Government of the propaganda material disseminated by the registered agent.

Respectfully submitted,

Attorney General
